Although the value of his or her collection of porcelain dolls is not always at the forefront of every collector's thoughts, he's probably a rare collector who doesn't think at least occasionally: I wonder how much this doll is worth? However, determining the value of a porcelain doll is not always easy. Porcelain dolls, which were made 80 to 100 years ago or more, can be quite valuable. For example, a doll made in 1916 by French sculptor Albert Marque - one of 100 limited edition tickets donned by Parisian couturier Jeanne Margaine-LaCroix - was sold in 2014 by Auction House Theriault's for $300,000. This is, of course, an exception, not a rule. A quick scan of the auction and buy-it-now listings on eBay finds porcelain doll values ranging from about $5 and $10 to a few thousand dollars or more, but no dolls listed above $10,000. First, you will need to find out if you can find out the basics of when and by whom the doll was made. Most dolls will have a manufacturer's stamp and a label on them indicating the year they were made. If you can not find any obvious brands of the manufacturer, look for all the marks on the back of the head, shoulders, or the top of the back of the doll. Some of them are numbers from porcelain molds used to make dolls, and you can search for them online (or potentially consult an appraiser) to help you identify your particular doll. Next, you will need to honestly assess the condition of your doll, since its condition is unlikely to be perfect. Obviously, mint condition porcelain dolls are more valuable than those in poor condition, but it's more unusual than you probably think one that is in perfect mint condition. Take a closer look at the doll. Are there chips or smouths? Does it look clean and bright or worn out and tired? Does the doll have all her hair and original clothes, or have some pieces been replaced? Find out if any repairs to the doll have been carried out or if more extensive restoration work has been carried out. A doll that has some work is generally less valuable than a doll in its original state. As in real estate, agents price dolls partly based on comps, or similar dolls that have sold. You will need to find some comps to help you set the value of the porcelain doll. If you have no reason to believe that your doll is particularly valuable, start on eBay. Search the lists of dolls sold that match (or are close to) the description of your doll. This is not always definitive because you may not find an exact match, but it will give you some idea of what you can expect to get for the doll. If you think your porcelain doll can be very valuable, though you probably don't want to start with eBay (although you might want to check it out there to see what's sold). Instead, you should consult an appraisor who specializes in antique I got this doll when I was 7-8 years old. I'm still in Condition. I never pulled her out of the leather case. I looked and looked online and can not find this doll anywhere. How much is it worth? According to poehere [105 Posts, 5,522 Comments]November 11, 20190 found this helpfulBest ReplyThere are two different types of dolls that determine the value of the doll. One doll is produced in a factory and the company produces 1000 to 5000 of each doll. These are called mass-produced dolls. The second is made by the famous manufacturer of dolls and limit the number of dolls they use manually. Your doll was made in a factory, therefore it is not unique. People list dolls like this as low as $1 and as high as $25. Normally, you should be able to sell a doll for about $5 to $10. Answer Was this useful? YesBest AnswerYou doll is beautiful! Why you can't find it anywhere is because there are too many ways that online retailers use it to try to sell it. It can take weeks to come across the right combination of words to find the exact match to it. Exaggerating. I've been buying and selling dolls (both when these were new and now as a retailer) since the 1970s/1980s and it's a huge challenge to value dolls because of this relatively new online phenomenon of doll glut. What I mean by that is with people like Marie Kondo and other declutter experts that she has dumped literally thousands if not millions of dolls to be sold at any given time through a large number of websites. In my quick search I found like dolls on you, but not exactly one, and it was no surprise. The combinations I've tried are: Collector's choice + PassportCollector choice + CaseCollector's + Madeline + DollI found many similar girls, but not exactly one. I would have to try so many other combinations and it could take a while, as I said above, it may take weeks to find it. If you have a lot of patience, you can search for more general terms like:Porcelain Doll DoPorcenánka Doll Brown Curly HairCollectors Choice Burgundy Dresscollectors Doll Black ShawlDoll Relih Embosed DressPorcelain DollSeriously - there are people who sell dolls that have them only as porcelain doll and expect people to find them and buy them. For those of us who are looking for specific things or those of us who sell and want to know what our girls are worth, this is a nightmare! Here's what I finally decided to do when my initial search turn blank... I'll find the nearest match and set my value a little higher, then I'll take the best deal. So you could start you at $25 or $50 and then make the best offer, which unfortunately can be as low as $5 to $10. The market really dictates value because value is just what someone pays, and right now there are dolls like yours selling for as low as 99 cents. Too bad! The clearer your listing, the greater the chance that you will have to if you decide to go that way. I can offer a lot of instructions on how to try to sell dolls on eBay if if go that way. I know it's not fair and it's very hard for those of us who collect and love these dolls and for those who hoped that if we stick to them long enough to sell them, we would order the amount. I wish I could give you better news. You may want to stick to it until the market fixes itself, which it always does. If you can keep it in a clean, dry warehouse for another 10+ years, you can sell it then for a nice profit. Now it's just not what time. Yes porcelain dolls were popular from the early 1800s to about 1880s, and most were made in Germany, France and Denmark. During the 1840s, the Germans began mass production of porcelain heads, which allowed more dolls to be on the market. These dolls are worth less than those that were handmade. Several indicators point to the value of the doll, including how it looks, the marks found on the doll. Check the condition of the doll. Look for missing fingers or chipped areas. Check the head, legs and arms and then check the non-porcelain parts to make sure they are original. Porcelain cracks with age, but does not reduce the value. Large cracks or cracks that have been repaired will reduce the value of the doll. Look at the painted eyes, rather than the glass eyes. Those with painted eyes were made in early production before the dolls were mass produced and have more value. Check the hair of the doll to see if it is the original hair. This makes the doll more valuable. Those with wigs of human hair are definitely more expensive than those with synthetic hair because they are older. Check the clothes on the doll. It's hard to find dolls with original clothes. Clothes should reflect the time in which the doll was made in order to increase the value of the doll. Check the doll to estimate the age. The early dolls had painted eyes and cheeks, along with cloth or leather stuffed bodies or wooden bodies. Later, the dolls had articulated necks or limbs. Most of the early dolls were made in an adult portrait, but in 1840 baby dolls were made in France and are very hard to find. Character dolls were made in Germany, in later years, and are highly sought after. These dolls have expressions on their faces and are more prized than mass-produced dolls. Look at the manufacturer's brands on dolls. It can be numbers, letters or a combination of the two that can be linked back to the catalogs in order to find the value of the doll. They are usually found on the back or shoulders or under the neck of the doll, although some can be found on the bottom of the legs. There are many places on the Internet where porcelain dolls and prices are found. Search for the value of the doll or get advice from a qualified appraiser. Tips Dolls made during the Victorian era, in period dresses, are extremely valuable and popular. Look under the wig for forms of numbers if they are visible anywhere else. Note Not all dolls have branding or mold numbers. That doesn't mean they're not valuable. Take the doll to a reputable seller who has good results if the information can not be found in any other way. Author Deborah Harding has been writing about it for more than nine years. Starting with cooking and gardening magazines, Harding then produced a gardening and cooking newsletter and website called Prymethyme Herbs in 1998. Published books include Kidstuff and Green Guide to Herb Gardening. He has a bachelor of music from Youngstown State University and sings professionally. Porcelain dolls, also referred to as porcelain dolls, because the way the glaze ends on the doll's face and hands look like porcelain dishes are some of the most collectibles on the market. These dolls were first made in Germany, France and Denmark in 1800. Today, the condition of the doll can affect its value almost as much as the date of manufacture and the rarity of the doll itself. Look for the date when the doll was made. Dolls made before the 1930s are considered real antiques. These dolls are more valuable than vintage dolls made after the thirties. Find the manufacturer's stamp. Dolls bearing the stamp of a particular manufacturer can be more valuable than dolls made by another manufacturer. Check the condition of the doll with the help of a magnifying glass. The condition of the doll can be evaluated as mint, near mint, very fine, tender, good or bad. The better the doll, the more worth it. Things that can affect the value of the doll include cleanliness, chips in the features of the doll, whether the hair is missing in the doll's wig and whether the doll's clothes are original for the doll. Look for signs that the doll has been restored. Some collectors prefer to buy dolls in their original condition. Recovery can reduce the value of the doll. Read current books and magazines about collecting dolls. These can help you identify the doll, as well as get an idea of the current prices of the doll.
