

I'm not robot

Continue

Share google calendar with others

Photo: Johanna Dahlberg (Unsplash) Many of us are happy to spend more time with our friends, but it often takes a few rounds back and forth before landing in the evening or weekend when everyone is free. Shared Google Calendar can fix some scheduling problems. Not a part where you find it hard to find a day where everyone can get together, necessarily, but part where you have to wait for everyone to reply to a group text about whether Wednesday or Thursday will work (and there's always one friend who doesn't respond to texts very often, which means everyone else has to have all the available dates on their schedule before they get the opportunity to respond, etc. etc.). At the Atlantic, Tori Latham writes about how the shared Google Calendar has improved my friendship: Staying true to form- organizational love is one of my defining qualities I've created in a common Google calendar. Anyone can mark when they are outside the city or otherwise occupied (denoted by OOO, workplace language out of office), as well as put down holds in advance of larger events (dinner, birthday, weekend trips). To my relief, my friends bought into the idea just a little cajoling. Perhaps G-cal and Put it on G-cal have become the usual refrains during our hangouts (even if these claims are sometimes sarcastic and come with an eye roll). I use Google Calendars to plan dates with former friends, so I know that the system works, and although my current social group doesn't share G-Cal, we still regularly send each other Google Calendar invitations for both offer and formalize hangouts. Screenshot: Nicole DiekerHere's what I love about using G-Cal: It goes by email, not through text. I'm a friend who very often doesn't respond to texts. My phone is constantly face down, silent, so I can focus on my laptop and get my job done. This includes checking and processing my email address, which means I'm much more likely to see and respond to an event invite. (Yes, I know that you can get text messages on your computer too. I turned those off the minute I realized they were there.) He puts a friend's events on my calendar for me and takes care of reminders. I don't have to remember to move the dinner discussion from the text chain to my calendar, and no one has to send a reminder text. This makes it very easy to offer another time or change plans. If a friend wants to hang out at a time that won't work for me, I can use G-Cal's to offer a new time feature to say yes to hangouts, which makes everyone feel good while offering a time that can work for both of us. If we had a shared Google Calendar, we shouldn't even do this (assuming our calendar has been updated accurately). Also, if a friend me for lunch something turns out it's super easy to replan. Do you use Google Calendar to schedule events for friends? How did it work for you, and what advice could you offer other groups of friends who could benefit from the overall G-Cal? If you don't know how to share your Google Calendar, you've gone to the right place. The process is so simple, even your grandmother can do it. All you need is a few clicks and a couple of minutes of your time. There are many reasons why people want to share their Google Calendar. For example, here in Android Authority we all use the same calendar to check future events, see who's on vacation, and so on. Some families use the same method, sharing a single calendar to see all doctor's meetings, trips, gatherings, and other events in one place. So you want to know how to share google calendar? Below you will find everything you need to know. How to share Google Calendar First things: You can only share your Google Calendar from your computer (or web browser in desktop mode) because the Android app doesn't support this feature. Honestly it's a huge oversight and something that I hope can eventually change, but now there's no real way about it. Related: How to configure and use Google Calendar the right way To get started, visit the Google Calendar website link and find the My Calendars section on the left side of the interface. Hover over the calendar you want to share, click the options icon (three vertical dots), and then select Settings & Sharing. From there, you can choose from two different sharing options. The first allows anyone with a link to view your calendar. This is probably not the best option for most people, because the calendar can also pop out when people google your name. If this doesn't frighten you, you can enable it by ticking the Make available to the public box. Then select Get shared link, copy it, and send it to anyone you want. The second option is the one that works best for most users: it allows you to share your calendar with specific people. Under Share with specific people, click Add people, write the email addresses of the people you want to share your calendar with, and define their permissions (see edit only...). When this is done, click the Send to send emails button to the people you have chosen. Google will then automatically add your calendar to your accounts that they can access in the Other Calendars section. Step-by-step instructions:Visit calendar.google.com.1) Find the My Calendars section on the left side of the interface and hover over the calendar you want to share.2) Click the options icon (three vertical dots) followed by and sharing.3) Select one of two different sharing options: select the Make publicly available share your calendar with anyone who has a link, or click Add people to share it only with those you have chosen.4) If you select add people, enter the e-mail addresses of the people you want to share your calendar with, define their permissions, and press Send.5) You can always make the calendar private again by separating it. To do this, just delete your email addresses in the Share with specific people section, or clear the Make available to the public check box. Read next: How to use Google Drive – everything you need to knowThere you have it – is how you share Google Calendar with other people. Are there any thoughts? Leave them in the comments below. Google Calendar is an amazing and useful program because it is more than that – it's a multi-platform service that is as elegant as it is versatile. It starts preloaded to an Android phone, tablet or Chromebook, and it comes out of there. It's online, and it's iOS. You can use it yourself or share it with others. You can even subscribe to public calendars that are separate but perfectly integrated into your own. And the best part is that it syncs smoothly on Google Cloud, so you never have to worry about losing something. How to add events and reminders to Google Calendar makes it easy to track your busy schedule. With events and reminders, you can ensure that you will never forget important days, no matter how busy you get. We're here to show you how to do it all the right way. How to add events and reminders to Google Calendar for AndroidHow to change google calendar view, event color and return to today's date Google Calendar is one of the easiest ways to track all moving parts of life from upcoming birthdays to meetings to attend. Now the default calendar view will show you the schedule and what you have next time. Sometimes, you want to check what's next on your schedule, although you might want to change your calendar view for it. This includes changing the color of events so that they pop out when you quickly look at your schedule. We also have detailed information about a quick return to today's date with just a tap to ensure you're always looking in the right place. Fortunately Google has made it really easy and we have all the details. How to change google calendar view, event color and return to today's date How to add a goal Many of us already use Google Calendar to track different parts of our lives. In addition to finding events and reminders, you can also set goals for yourself. This includes goals to execute, work, friends, and much more. We have information for you about how to set up. add target google calendar It's the best calendar app out there We love Android because it offers offers applications installed in your phone. But what if Google Calendar is the best calendar program? Here's a review of what we found when we pitted it against a bunch of third-party alternatives to our Best Calendar App. Do you agree? The best Android Google Calendar calendar calendar now contains more material... and nice I have bad news for almost everyone: On June 18, it became clear that the Google Calendar was set for many users, at least in the New York region. If you're a regular google productivity tool user, you'll probably think exactly how to tell you exactly how google calendar doesn't work – besides, you know, just trying to sign in and being greeted with an error message (womp, womp). Fortunately though, it's actually quite easy to confirm whether Google Calendar is experiencing widespread disruption, or whether it's a problem that may be due to your personal computer or internet connection. It's unclear what's causing the problem yet. Vanity has reached Out to Google for comment, and we will update this post when we hear back. In the Google G Suite status dashboard, which provides status updates for all known and beloved G Suite apps, the Google Calendar service is currently running at 10:22 ET. We examine reports on the issue of Google Calendar. We will provide more information shortly. Affected users can't access Google Calendar, the message on the page said. At least you (probably) aren't going to be the only person in your office late in the meeting because you can't access your calendar. And hey, while you're waiting for Calendar to return, you could always start that paper planner you're thinking about just in case something like this happens again, right? Screenshot via Google CalendarBet back to the question at hand: How can you tell if Google Calendar doesn't work? The good news is that you have several options. In Google's G Suite status panel, my personal go-to is the site Is It Down Right Now? Their database is quite extensive – you can check out various sites across the net for service interruptions that can help you figure out if you really need to reboot your router or not. Is it down now? also features in the comments section, which can be handy if you're wondering what might be with the site currently researching. Right now, comments from users suggest that people are loading 404 pages around the world, from Utah to Texas, Italy. I can also confirm that from my laptop in New York. New York, my calendar will only upload a message that says , uh oh! There was a problem loading the calendar. Try again after a few minutes. The app status dashboard lets you check the performance status of all Google apps and services that fortunately include Google Calendar and Hangouts. At this point, hangouts are marked with a green circle. On the other hand, the calendar is marked in orange, i.e. disruption of the service. It may take some time for application status dashboard updates to appear, so it's probably a good time to check frequently, especially if you're having problems. As of now, it seems that all we can do is wait! Fortunately, since Hangouts, Groups and Chat looks good, you can go ahead and ping your coworkers to see if you actually had a meeting now. Good luck keeping busy, everyone! This post was originally published on June 30, 2016. It was updated on June 18, 2019.