Place called Brown: The Browns Canyon National Monument at The Colorado Brown Mountain Camp Ground - on the Wood River - outside of Meeteetse, which may mean the end of the warm sea - is just downstream from Kerwin - which fits so much of the puzzle... Brown Cemetery, Brown Hill, Montana, Brown Mountain Mines (in Or ai County, Colorado - Listening Or Chief Speech) Brown Mountain, Colorado (Uncompahgre River, Cement Creek, etc.....) In mid-2010, wealthy author/collector/archaeologist Forrest Penn hid and recovered a medieval chest filled with gold coins and other precious artifacts somewhere in the Rocky Mountains. He wrote a book called The Thrill of The Chase, which hid clues to help people find treasure. In this book, there is a poem that secretly encodes the whereabouts of this treasure chest. If you can solve the puzzle, you can go ahead and collect hundreds of thousands of dollars now (if not well over a million)! But, grab your horse! It's not that easy. Thousands of people have tried it - no luck at all! Luckily, we'll help you get directly to penn's gold! Brown House - right on the floor of Browns Hill Road - near the bank of the Little Snake River. Cemetery upstream (the end ever painted almost). The end is ever close and has - it can mean on the left. It can mean death. This can mean where the stream ends. Tanatalus Creek (where it ends and goes up to the left - 'heavy load' can be weighed over tantalum's head) Brown Mtn. Campground- Kirwin (abandoned mining town - flame swells right above the mountain) hmm... In Wyoming, there's Highway 237 (line # odd syllables) - Highway89 (No. 8 and 9 are located under Brown's house, and there's no place for meekness) - and it's called Grover

Right: Lander. The Wasashaki Reservoir appears to have a small dam and an electric generator. High Meadow Lake, Cliff Lake.Grafton Tyler Brown-Painter Brown's house seems to be a very important clue. Forrest said that if he knew Brown's house, he could walk straight to the treasure. So, it seems that wwwh is the first 'clue', and HoB is the second. So if you can find Brown's house correctly, the treasure can be in short order. Supposedly. Therefore, we think HoB is one of the most important clues in the entire city. The following ones are why you are coming to this website! We give you hints and clues that you won't dare to do with any of the other sites. We are so annoyed that we don't know the answer to the mystery, and even if it means losing treasure, we are willing to give up all our research so that someone can solve it and know the solution. So, what is the best solution anyone has ever reached? It's not one of the things you've read about online (except here of course), it's actually a Joe Brown putt in. To leave the mammoth hot springs, the last warm sea heading north from Yellowstone is on the boiling river, Joe Brown boat launch and putting-in... A few inches up the Wyoming-Montana line. The boiling river is on top of Gardner Canyon. If we drive down the canyon and don't walk too far (about 10 or 15 miles), we've come across Brown's very nice house, Joe Brown Putting In! On the side of the highway is a boat launch officially known as Joe Brown Put-In. It's on the bottom of Joe Brown Creek, and the Joe Brown Trail - Dome Mountain (Brown's Dome?) Climb up. Slip right next to Joe Brown Creek is N'Slide Creek (slides and sliding are mentioned a few times in the book). Neighborhood: Sliding Mtn East, Sliding Mtn. West, High Mtn. In mid-2010, wealthy author/collector/archaeologist Forrest Penn hid a medieval chest filled with gold coins and other valuable artifacts somewhere in the Rocky Mountains so anyone could go and retrieve it. Thousands of people have tried it - no luck at all! For you, we're here to help guide you right on the pen's gold! If Joe Brown's putting is Brown's hometown, is there a meek place? it is. Well, we have two good candidates, one in either direction: the devil's slide on Mount Shinnabar, and the Sphinx, Montana. The devil's slide is a rock formation on the side of Mount Shinnavar - and it just happened to be the exact place that Joe Meek was executed by the Indians a few hundred years ago. In addition, the place named after the devil has nowhere to go for meek people. Besides the connection with death (the end has ever been drawn closer). Coincidentally, aldridge's ghost town is at the top of the devil's slide. Aldridge also has a cemetery (a place for a meek place). Next, we came across the town of Electricity (Heavy Loads) with old gravel pits (heavy loads) and it was a power plant in all local mines (heavy loads). And Beatty Gulch (gorge = rapids = rapids occupied by high water and sudden cracks). In other ways, if we're actually 'put' on Joe Brown's, the very next thing we'll float past is Sphinx Mountain and Sphinx, Montana (more meek here). The sphinx is famous for its immortality (the end is almost drawn). The next place we stumbled upon is Tom Minor Creek (Nodle, Just Pick & Shovel - 'Your' Creek, The Creek Is Named After Someone). Just heavy loads and high water... Instead of 100 yards, it passes through an electrical station (heavy loads) and the Tom Miner Creek Road Bridge (water height). Brown's house is line 8, no where is it is, and it's on Highway 89. Joe Brown boat ramp sat or put/put: Lat: 45.16805447 Long: -110.85559557 Put - To enter a place, especially water/port/port, Joe Brown boat foot-in, in his book, FF says map of the Gallatin National Forest, which was once very convenient - Joe Brown Creek is very convenient. Joe Brown discovered gold in the 1800s at Bear Gulch (near Mount Gardiner). Nearby Loran Indian Peak. Rock Creek Meter (location was expelled from Meek - but other Rock Creek meets yellowstone's other forks - coincidence?). Stauten Creek ends downstream and on the left (the place for meekness - the end is drawn almost close - you can't paddle your creek). Joe Brown launches a boat and put it to probably the most elegant solution out there for pen treasures. No bars. It's not perfect, but we've never seen anything better. Yet. However, people apparently have no luck, putting themselves have checked everything around. So, putting doesn't seem to be a treasure position. However, it seems to fit beautifully as one of the clues. Perhaps better than the Llama Ranger station. So, don't discount Joe Brown as Brown in 'Brown's House'. Or, so do so in your The map of Joe Brown Footin, Sphinx, Montana, slip-and-slide creek area is located in a small community of East Glacier Park on the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains near the southern edge of Glacier National Park, with brown houses, art galleries and museums all that is needed to tend to proper fires. Brown House was a grocery store dating back to its early 20s. The main room still has a lot of fixtures, furniture and even a lot of stuff that was here when there were shops. Many other items from the early days of the East Glacier and Blackpit Sanctuary are on display in museums integrated with the museum. The Brown House Gallery and Museum was founded in 1973 and exhibits works by Montana artists. The owner is a potter and sculptor, producing pottery and stone ware, as well as bronze sculptures in the studio of the Brown House. It is also one block east of Amtrak Station. There are 3 recently renovated and renovated rooms. Overlooking the mountains, the upstairs rooms feature a queen bed, twin day beds and air conditioning. One of the downstairs rooms is decorated in a traditional style and features a queen-size bed and a twin day bed. Other downstairs rooms are decorated in a country cottage style and feature a queen bed. There is also a rollaway bed. All three rooms feature a private entrance, private bath, electric heat and TV, brown house is within walking distance of great restaurants, gift shops, car rentals, horseback riding discounts, golf courses and laundry.
