[1] A total of six 40-minute episodes were produced and released on VHS exclusively at participating McDonald's restaurants from October 9, 1998 to January 30, 2003. Productions by Mark and Bob Mothersbaugh (best known for composing music for Rugrats, another Classic Csupo series) composed the score of the series, while John Holmquist (who also directed some episodes of Rugrats) directed the first episode of the series. The artistic style of the series has a similar look to Rugrats and Rocket Power (another Csupo classic series). Background music was recycled from later episodes of Rugrats. In a format similar to the Super Mario Bros. Super Show!, each episode begins and ends with a live-action segment. By various accounts, the episodes turned out to be quite popular, to which individual McDonald's locations often ran out of VHS tapes, which were sold individually for $3.49 and could be purchased with a small vanilla ice cream cone or Diet Coke. Csupo's classics also sold them through his online gift shop, which closed in the fall of 2005. Featuring Lego vehicles the build was released at the restaurant chain in 1999, a year after the series originally premiered. The front of each vehicle had a picture of one of the McDonaldland characters in the style of a Csupo classic, as shown in the series. The cast of The Voice's main talent in the series includes KC veterans Christine Cavanaugh, Kath Soucie, and Charlie Adler. Ronald McDonald's role is credited to himself. Due to a sudden bout of stormy weather, campers are forced to stay in an old house where a phantom head called leads them through a challenging game that will eventually help them escape. Along the way, Fry Kids and McNuggets get trapped and are separated from the group and the rest face off against the phantom head in the challenge of puzzles. Tika, Hamburglar, and Birdie fail every riddle and are swept into traps, leaving only Ronald, Grimace, and Sundae to solve the last thing they do. Holographic head turns out to be a child named Franklin programming games with the help of Tika (who wanted to give Ronald and McNuggets in the lab room. After Ronald gets You Win from Franklin, Dr. Quizzical returns to catch his son in the act and reveals that Franklin has done something like this before. Franklin apologises to the gang for their actions and is allowed to join their camping trip, becoming their new friend in the process. Note: The only appearance of Fry Kids in the series and the 1998 Klasky-Csupo Robot logo makes it debut. 2 Grimace Island legendJim DuffyMark Zaslove and Eryk CasemiroJanuary 22, 1999 (1999-01-22) Ronald and the gang go out on a journey to Grimace Island (where a grimace species is discovered) after Grimace receives a letter purportedly to the island's residents asking for help. Unkiled by everyone, the letter was actually written by pirate Captain One-Eyed Sally and her first friend Blather in a scheme by the two to follow the gang to the island in order to seize the Grimaces' legendary treasure for themselves. 3 Visitors from spaceJeff ScottDavid RegalApril 23, 1999 (1999-04-23) Hamburglar tricks the gang into believing that aliens have come to Earth so that he can steal McDonald's burgers without hitting them, costing him their trust in him when he finds out. Later, Hamburglar gets kidnapped by real aliens after foolishly accepting offers to go on vacation with them, not realizing all too late that the holiday will end up keeping him away from Earth for thousands of years. Despite being angry at him for his lie and prank, Ronald and his friends go on a mission in space to rescue hamburglar. Note: Ronald and Sundae go down the ball pit slide for the last time because this is the last episode that has the original introduction and closing. It's also the latest episode where Sundae appears in live-action segments. Before this episode, there was a Rugrats episode of the same name. 4 Birthday WorldAnthony BellDavid RegalAdditional Material: Emily Kapnek and Eryk CasemiroMarch 30, 2001 (2001-03-30) Hamburglar is annoyed that he forgot Ronald's birthday and doesn't have a gift for him until a bad mad scientist named Professor Thaddeus J. Pinchworm gives him tickets to a fake theme park called Birthday World. During his visit, Ronald and his friends quickly disappointed to find that most of the park rides are broken and/or malfunctioning. They then ride a roller coaster that turns into toddlers and babies with a beam. The gang then discovers that they were testing subjects for the evil Pinchworm scheme to use a larger version of the beam to de-age the world's population in order to achieve world domination. Despite the fact that the work left their skills limited, Ronald and his friends set out to stop Pinchworm's scheme and recover at their regular age. Note: A new opening sequence has been performed for this episode and Two. As a result, Sundae no longer appears in segments of live events, but is heard once off screen. 5 Have time, Will travel Anthony BellEmily KapnekAdditional Material: Eryk Casemiro and David RegalOctober 19, 2001 (2001-10-19) While helping Franklin clean up his father's lab, Ronald and his buddies come across a time machine in which Hamburglar dreams of a crazy system to use a time machine to get out of cleaning and they eventually lose in time. Their time travel adventures take them to prehistoric times, where the time machine is almost digested by tyrannosaurus and meet their cave ancestors, the Middle Ages, where they entertain the spoiled young King Murray in order to save the captured Birdie, the Wild West, where hamburglar ant Henry H. Thief II appears (whose inhabitants mistake Hamburglar for) and the disco era of the 1970s, where they briefly meet Mayor McCheese. Note The only episode where McNuggets is missing. 6 Monster O' McDondland LochAnthony BellBarbara Herndon and Jill GoreyAdditional Material: Eryk Casemiro and David RegalJanuary 30, 2003 (2003-01-30) The gang travels to a Scottish expedition known as O' McDondland Lochland, where Sundae's cousin Scotty lives. They also run into a conspiracy by a mad scientist named Stiles and his assistant Pip's attempt to build a replica of the Loch Ness Monster in order to make money from the discovery. Birdie befriends the real Loch Ness Monster, which is called Simon and wants its existence to be kept secret. Despite not being good at keeping secrets, Birdie agrees, but it becomes difficult when the Stiles and Pip system goes awry, putting everyone in danger. Note: This episode was the rarest of all six, as it was only released online on the Klasky Csupo website on January 30, 2003 unlike the McDonald's stores. The episode was titled The Legend of Ol' McDondland Loch on most websites. It was also Christine Cavanaugh's final acting role, as it was released approximately two years after her retirement.
