Land dreugh pronunciation

What are Nix-Hounds? They're arthropods. In fact, they were created by Vivec to hunt the Dreughs during a time-lost campaign against the Altmer of the Sea. Background on Guars and Tiber Septim's love of tiger lizards. Another little-known fact is that the imperialists often refer to Guars as Tigers. Here's why: During a tour of Morrowind in the earliest days of Armistace, Tiber Septim was thrilled with the animals. On the mainland, and especially Deshaan Plains, guars are striped. This, combined with the fact that His Holiness was never able to pronounce 'Guar' correctly (his problems with the provincial Chimerian tongue are legendary), led septim to finally call them tigers, from a fabled recollection of a history book the beast he loved as a youth. The new name is stuck. Even now, Dribble's slaves often refer to their cattle Guar as Tigers. At the different stages of Kwama The Warrior is the combined version of Forager and Worker. The former jumps through the hole in the latter's mouth and the head pops out the other end; the whole symbiot stands up. Voila: Warrior form. Vehkship: in character fragment: Faith engines, properly called Rescue Semi-Shockpoint Nilgularity, provide energy for short dream-sleeve jumps in case a Vehkship's main ego is damaged, allowing the CODA Paravant to potentially get to the safety of an voidyard orbital. By creating the equivalent of a Nu-class Mnemolic, shrinking it instantly via a creatia tesseract array, and then projecting the resulting moth-talk well to a zero-point just outside the ego hull, an ASSN can bounce paravant into era-flowing without the necessary energies of nearby Aetheric bodies or shockpoint application. ASSN, however, is strictly Last Ditch technology. It is often considered too dangerous for its own good, because it works on the rarified principles of Phynaster's Inversion, a set of mathematics that does not exist in our own dimension. Vehkships have disappeared in zero-place trying to make an ASSN jump-yes, the celestial anomaly known as M4bV Legerity, in which C0DA Oblivion Vanquisher appears and implodes for eternity, is the belief system's most famous cautionary tale. What appears to be an Altmeri comment on Talos: To kill man is to reach heaven, from where we came before The Doom Drum's iniquity. When we achieve this, we can escape the mockery and long shame of Material Prison. To achieve this goal, we must: 1) Delete Upstart Talos from the mythical. His presence strengthens the wheels of convention, and binds our souls to this plane. 2) Remove Man not only from the pattern of possibility, so that the very idea of them can be forgotten and thus never again repeated. 3) With Talos and Sons of Talos removed, the Dragon will be ours to unbind. The world of mortals will be over. The dragon will his grip on stagnant linear time and moving like free snake again, moving through Joher without a goal or burden, spilling time along countless roads we once traveled. And with it we will reclaim the cloak of the indestructible spirit. On the Redguards: No, I was actually referring to the Black Panthers and their radicalism. As some know, I'm not really a fan of the United Colors of Beneton approach to Tamrielicreation, which smacks of white guilt and offense rather than a holistic form of beautiful inclusion. Thus, it is my fault that the Asian analogues were eaten. Oops. But others bring them back. But I promise that my choice had nothing to do with Yellow Peril, it had to do with Yellow Peril, it had to do with Said. when I started writing Redguard, I really thought about how unique the blacks in Tamriel were: they came in and kicked their ass and slaughtered the indigenes while they were doing it. They invaded. It was the first time I'd met the idea of black imperialism... and it struck me big time, as something 1) new, 2) potentially dangerous if taken as comment, and 3) potentially row if taken as comment. Who knows. AVault said it had a story worthy of being on stage, and Michael Mack (Cyrus) once thanked me for giving him words that Black People don't get to say (referring to Cyrus's speech and reversal of the Son of the Father)... that broke my heart and made me blow my chest at the same time. Which is a long way to say: panther love. Numidium's siege of Alinor: It's not the brass god who destroys everything as much as it is the whole plane(t)s and timelines that orbit it, and sing world refusals. Surrender of Alinor occurred in an hour, but Numidium's siege lasted from mythical time to long into the fifth. Some Mirror Logicians of the Altmer fight it still in chrysalis shells that phase in and out of Tamrielic Prime, and their brothers know nothing about their purpose unless they stare too long and break their own possipoints. Monotheism in Tamriel: Skaal is animistic, not monotheistic. Big difference there. As for the lists of cultural pantheons, they are not exhaustive - Dagon, it seems, plays a greater role in Nordic myths than the author (me) of Varieties of Faith was aware of. The Alessian order was the most successful attempt at monotheism in Tamrian history - and even they knew better than to disprove other religions in their entirety, just co-opt and reduce them. Dwemer is special in his views. If one could misinterpret the name of his religion (they were said to be pious), one might call it negalithic refusatronic world-navel-gazinism. Historically, the magical nature frowns Nirn on monotheism. With a hammer so big. That kind of Maruhkati talk gets you deleted. relationships: As far as Anuad: Nirn (Female / Land / Freedom catalyst for birth-death of enantiomorph)/ Anu-Padomay (enantiomorph with necessary betrayal)/?* (Witness Shield-thane that goes blind or is mutilated and thus solidifies the waveform; blind / mutilated = = final decision) * Search and you shall find. I hid it. Bonus: King Hrol (Seeker / Healer of Kingdom), from countries outside the lost Twil. Twil as Twilight. Gray maybe. Aurbis. His knights numbered eighteen less than one, the number of Hurling Disk. SPACE GODS BEGAT REMAN! NEWS ON ZERO-SUM, PACIFIC STANDARD GRADIENT! On the plausibility of Mankar Camoran's claims: Also in all justice, there is enough evidence to support Mankar's claims that I was glad it went in. The idea really turns the idea of Tamriel on his head. Imagine forget the area of oblivion about the share of attribution, for example, with eight mighty daedra (one of which is Boethiah) who exercise divine power over their kingdom, and all their subjects bound to the whims of that power; now imagine it under a din-theology and creation myth(s) as complicated as anything at Tamriel, where the countless mortal nirn were, to the inhabitants of the eight divine attribution part, in fact, daedra. This kingdom would be surrounded by void, just like Tamriel, in turn surrounded by Aetherius, and who is to say that the great hole known as the Sun does not hit its shores, too? Lorkhan the Padoma can be exactly what Mankar says he is: the dead Lord of a lost daedric kingdom whose gods are mighty liars. On the different times: Don't forget that gods can be shaped by the mytopoeic powers of mantlers so Tosh Raka can be an Akaviri avatar of Akatosh with a grudge against his mirror brother in Cyrodiil. Just like Akatosh-who-we-usually-know-him could time-scheme against his mirror-brother of nords, Alduin, to keep today's kalpa - perhaps his favorite - from being eaten. Notice all the cans. On Nerevar's face was the Indoril helm: the Indoril masks were official, and they each depicted his true visage. There was also a special Daedric helmet version in the Morrowind Art Book, but the look depicted his more terrible aspect as Hortator and Padomaic master. I can say many things, but Lord Indoril Nerevar was my beloved from get go during my tenure as MW Art Director. Edit: to Lorus, it's his bonewalker version, lost to the annals of most powerful being: Talos. The HoonDing. Trinimac. Vivec, i'm sorry, I'm sorry, but i'm not Reman, i'm sorry, Auri-El. Wulfharth. Morihaus. Pelinal. That's my list, and pretty much in that order. Even though Vivec killed Tiber Septim once... But I mentioned Talos, not the emperor. Another Altmeri in the character snippet: Or the number may be more Lorkhanic nonsense; that is, convenient for man. The the line is dead, and it is his stranglehold on the mythical. A single wheel? More like a telescope stretching all the way back to the Eye of Anui-El, with Padomaics countless along its endless walls. We're coming after you in all your quarters, Sons of Talos. No one's going to survive. The Prophet of Landfall, a birthday present to Kurt Kuhlmann: He has come down from the mountains, the chitin of belly segments freshly painted in faith. The suns shine over his head, each pronouncing his name in his way. The spert before him distorts in the blur of their heat as he climbs the last hill, but his vision is clear. It always has been. His fifth and second arms surround his staff when his mandibles click out a small prayer. Beyond the barrens lay the Crescent of the Eighty and One Thrones, and all the villages that hang from it like a jewel belt. They don't know it yet, the millions who work, rule, and commit their countless sins out there in the cradle of all written history, but he will save them. In the ones and twos, then in droves, and their own priests and their own kings will cast down their false idols and take up the new faith. He would allow himself some pride if that feeling struck him; Instead, he tests his locust wings on the wind so that he can slide into the first steps of Salvation. Description of an Altmer ship: Made of crystal and solidified sunlight, with wings even if they don't fly, and prows that elongated into swirling Sun-Birds, and pearl-encrusted mini-trebuchets suitable for sailing as fire pure aetheric fire, and banners, banners, list their ancestors all the way back to Dawn. This is Old Mary at Water. On Mnemolic magic is related to Star Orphans, gods and heroes and demons who live between creations, which can include the reality-bending burps known as Dragon Breaks. Think of them as the stars between kalpas, if it helps. (It probably doesn't help at all, really.) What's up with the blue star himself? It's a good little hidden bite that I don't want to destroy. Someone's finding it. On Vivec and Morrowind: I can safely say that Vivec is the most realized character in video game fiction. Period. If a hermaphric, bug-armored, bipolar god king found in several universes that have their own Bible with *actually* magic strewn through it is your idea of a cliché, then I really want to live in your world. That sounds funny and new. But wait, then I have to inexplicably make snarling and insulting comments in a forum where creators often tread. And it would guickly make me boorish and good luck with it. I can also say that Morrowind is the finest novel written in video game fiction. A 40-hour story whose protagonist is only ever referred to is almost Nabokovian in aspiration, and if truth is determined only by the player is akin to Borges if he had only been born with a USB port on the back of his beloved neck. There is a fine line between celebrated tradition tuned to the masterstrokes of its craftsmen and cliché demons under volcanoes. Morrowind is the former, Selbeth, and nowhere near the latter. Except, again, when wrapped 'round electric peanuts that are bumped from the back row with bright'n'shiny emphasizes for effect. On Ruma Camoran: Ruma gave birth to herself, and her father was the father. She also gave birth to her brother, but he is not her son. From the totemic traditions of Atmoric culture.... the accounts of men's origins differ from culture to culture. Note how the somewhat dubious scholarship of the 3rd Edition Pocket Guide to the Empire claimed that Nedics was the ancestor of the North, having come to Tamriel from the cold and bitter waste on the Atmoric continent sometime during the meretic (mythical) era, which flew in the face of previous studies. The most famous of these, of course, is Gwylim Press's own Frontier, Conquest, and Accomodation, which portrays Nedics as a mannish race indigenous to Tamriel, extant and thriving long before the arrival of Ysgramor ancestors. In any case, the truth about the prehistoric man is most likely lost in god-time inexperieties of Dawn, where no absolute answer will ever come on any subject at all. Part of the fabled Numinatus! [First form] was untranslable, which was good for us, but difficult (which was also good for us). Best descriptions came from the edges, kaleidocules dance myriadetada to the song of Nil. They talked about [first form] in side language, angry at having to speak at all, for the word is flesh. [text lost]... and [they] told us that if we didn't hurry and make up for our entire language, they would remove Remover, because that's what we wanted to call [first form]. So we did. We went to [the Giants] and brought them painted cows, for they love them, and that's tradition, and what better way to destroy this concept than by issuing their [death] with one? From [the Giants] we learned wind, and in the words and spoke that way in secret. It was hard to do that. ONTOLOGICA CHIMERA (a tribute to Jorge Luis Borges' Argumentum Ornithologicum. Essentially, it is simply Borge's text rewritten with Morrowind terms.) I stood on Deshaan, leaned on my balance bar, my stilts covered in the muck falling in love with Necrom, and staring at the sky. There I saw a number of cliff-bikers hovering by in random fashion, and yet I couldn't count them. Maybe I was tired. So, for some reason, I was reminded of teachings I learned in temple about the tower. Well, that's not true, I knew the reason why this memory came back to me there in my lean, but I was afraid to realize it in words until now. If the ultimate tower were to really exist, it means that the exact number of cliff-riders who flew by has been recorded by the stars supporting it. If it did not exist, then their number will forever be forgotten, as I forgot it; rather, which I ignored the bother to
