1987[3]CountryAustraliaState(s)Northern Territory, Western Australia Joseph Thomas Schwab, also known as Josef Schwab (25 November 1960 – June 19, 1987) was a serial or serial killer , which killed five people in the Top End province of the Northern Territory and Kimberley province in Western Australia in June 1987. Schwab, a German citizen, has visited Australia with a tourist visa; the media dubbed kimberley Killer. Joseph Thomas Schwab's early life was born in Starnberg, Bavaria, West Germany on November 25, 1960. A student who was a shy and embarrassed, he joined a local rifle club in Pocking at the age of 15, remaining a member until 1981. [4] On 15 June 1981, he travelled to Adelaide, South Australia, and worked as a cabinet maker while joining a local pistol club. [4] Possessing several volks and 4WD, he also went on to shoot feral pigs. He returned to Germany on May 10, 1984, becoming a security guard and trained using a handgun. [5] He worked as a night watcher from April 3, 1985 to April 15, 1987, and currently, he committed several minor crimes. [4] On 18 April 1987, he arrived in Brisbane, Australia via Bangkok as a tourist. [4] On April 22, he rented a Toyota 4Runner at Brisbane Airport before buying three rifles (.223-caliber Ruger Mini-14 semi-automatic rifle, a .308 RAifal action bolt of SAKO and a .22-caliber Brno bolt rifle) and Winchester 12-gauge pump action 12-gauge rifle and 3,000 He then departed for and was around the Diamantina River by 6 May and in the Darwin area by 20 May. [4] The first known victim's murder of a gun was Marcus Bullen (70), Fremantle's former deputy mayor, and his son, Lance Bullen (42), who was shot dead with Ruger on the morning of June 9, during scouts for fishing on the banks of the Victorian River. They were reported missing to Timber Creek Police, and their burning station gerabo was found the next day and their bodies stripped were found nearby in an unsealed shallow grave. [6] Just five days later, three locals who went fishing overnight (Phillip Walkemeyer (26), his fiance Julie Warren (25), and their friend, Terry Bolt (36)) were shot dead hundreds of kilometres away in Western Australia in similar circumstances at a campsite in the Borders River Pentecost [8] They were reported missing the next day after not appearing at work, and colleagues (two of whom had been camped out with them the previous day) returned to the site and found Toyota burning and trace their blood. [4] Police later knocked over the remains of a man floating nearby in the river. As in previous incidents, Schwab had accelerated the victim, put their possession in their vehicle, and then drove him a short distance and set it on fire. An investigative Police investigation was unable to determine the motive for the killing, and the killer evaded arrests despite roadblocks being set up across the area. [9] A team of seven police officers from the Tactical Response Group and an officer from the forensic division were rushed by rental jets from Perth to Kununurra to assist Kimberley police with the accuracy of the suspect. [10] Forensics identified the weapon used in the killings as a semi-automatic Ruger Rifle. The killer is suspected of driving a white Toyota 4Runner[5] with a red side strip raided after a lorry driver crashed a vehicle with this evidence leaving the fire area of the second vehicle. Intensive police search and roadblock network could not find the suspect's vehicle. However, an outgoing livestock helicopter pilot who was mustering from Napier Downs station,[11] raised the alarm after seeing a camouflaged vehicle in a bushland near Fitzroy Crossing. [9] The police were tactical, unsure if the hidden vehicle belonged to the gun they were looking for, approached him carefully on the ground and then called on Cessna police 182 to fly over the site in an attempt to pump the occupants out into the open. A man dressed in military pants and armed with a semi-automatic weapon emerged from a camouflaged camp and opened fire on the plane. Police on the ground identified themselves, where when the gunmen opened fire on them as well. Police returned firefighting, including shooting a tear gas caniser, eventually killing a gun after firefighters [9] Police were able to rescue the vehicle from a grip initiated by a caniser, searching for personal items (licenses, credit cards, camping items etc.) from victims therein. The remains were then flown to Perth to be drained. They then identified the gunman Schwab is based on rental and immigration documents, but his motive for murder remains unknown.
