The Polish City, is a neighborhood of Riverhead, a well-known immigrant community that was located there over a century ago. It is home to many Polish deli, restaurants and, of course, the annual Polish city fair. For more information, see their Facebook page. RIVERHEAD, N.Y. - For the first time in 47 years, the streets of the Polish town of Riverhead are not filled with polka music and mouthwatering the smell of pierogies coming in August - the annual Polish Town Street Fair and Festival has been canceled due to coronavirus. Polish Town Civic Association president Kay Davis, when asked how she felt about being pulled the plug on the celebrations, said: 'We will not cancel fair. We've never been fair - coronavirus did. It's something we were forced to do. The annual contest for the crown of the new Miss Poland Town USA was also derailed, Davis said. Davis said everyone involved felt very bad that we couldn't get the festival. But we will continue next year and it will be bigger and better - more strength, energy and love. Over the weekend, which would have been fair, August 15 and 15, Davis said that he and other volunteers still wear Polish Town T-shirts.There was no way to avoid the result, Davis said; Due to the gradual reopening of the economy due to the pandemic, the Suffolk County Health Department said they cannot grant permission until Long Island has reached Phase 4, which could happen in July. How can you put together a fair in four weeks? Davis asked. He said he had also approached local elected officials and the police chief, but had no chance of moving forward. We are all very sad about this, he said. But next year, the festival will be better than ever. Other events including the Mattituck Lions Club Strawberry Festival, Dances Park in Greenport and Southampton July 4 parade have also been cancelled. Polonaise Park is for sale. The Polish Town Civic Association is looking to sell the site where it traditionally held a two-day polka festival during its annual street fair. We haven't had a dance festival in the last three years, said Polish Town Civic Association president Kay Davis. There's no revenue coming up and we're spending thousands of dollars on taxes and maintenance, so we decided to sell it. Davis said there had been a decline in interest in polka dancing over the years and the citizen had lost money at the dance festival. Davis stressed that the civil society will not stop the street. It was cancelled this year due to the coronavirus pandemic, but it will return to the united States in 2021. This would have been the 46th meeting organised by the Citizens' Association of the City of Poland. Although the fair increased significantly in size in the decades since its inception in 1975, recent years have become smaller. The citizen canceled carnival rides and a polka dance festival. Last year, a traditional Polish wedding and procession at St Isidore Church in a showmobile outside Pulaski Street School did not take place. The pavilion on the site was built in 1999 after the civic famous, large red and white striped tent was destroyed by the storm in 1997. As for people, organizations have to adapt and change procedures, Davis said. The money spent on taxes and maintenance on the site can be redecorated in efforts around the Polish City, he said. The civil society has not publicly disclosed its bid price for the 1.3-acre site on the corner of Lincoln Street and Osborn Avenue, Davis said. The pavilion property is located across the street from civics. Headquarters. Davis said after the group posted for sale signs on the property, rumors began to circulate that the civic organization was closing. Not true, Davis said. We have a good board and new, young members are coming, he said. The signs also prompted calls from 16 interested prospective buyers, Davis said. The property is located in the D.C.-3 zones' area, which allows for a variety of commercial uses from the right, including retail stores, banks, restaurants and offices, as well as townhouses and single-family homes. (Credit: Elizabeth Wagner) The annual Polish City Street Fair and Festival is concerned about the COVID-19 pandemic. This is the first time since its inaugural event in 1975 that the festival has been cancelled. For the charity the Polish Town Civic Association, the fair was scheduled to take place on August 15 and 16 this year. To support the local press, subscribe today I am so disappointed in this, said Polish Town Civic Association President Kay Davis. We tried every angle to find out what the situation was in August. The Suffolk County Health Department told him they would not issue permits until Phase 4 of the state's reopening plan, which does not start until at least July. No one will give us an answer, and so we have a conference meeting with our board and we decided the best thing to do is just cancel it, he said. We owed so much. We're going to miss it. The Riverhead Town Board has a resolution scheduled for Tuesday to return a $350 application fee for the festival. Ms Davis says there are thousands of dollars in expenses the association has already spent on the event. There were 250 applications from vendors, he said. Ms Davis said they had had heavy rain during the festival in the past and they held the event anyway. The Polish city fair and festival are not the only event to be cancelled. The Town Board Agenda Tuesday has resolutions to refund application fees for seven other events, including Peconic Bay Medical Center's Health Walk, Tangier Outlet Center's Memorial Day Block Party and the Butterfly Effect Project's Food Truck Fair. The events have decided to change the date of their events, including the East End Arts 24th annual Community Mosaic Street Painting Festival, which will now take place on September 6, instead of the end of May, and the popular Chicken Kidz Children's Event, which will now take place in the week of September 30 through October 4. Beyond Riverhead, annual events such as the Fourth of July parade in Southampton, the Hampton Classic Horse Show in Bridgehampton and the Strawberry Festival in Mattituck have been cancelled this summer.
