Make it easier to read in small groups with a reading strategy checklist. Here's a free checklist I made for managed reading groups to report what I see with kindergarten parents. When reading with small groups, documenting what strategies students are trying is a great way to both informally evaluate and help guide their own planning. We teachers have to find ways to save time, right? Well, in my opinion, the checklist is the way to go. Let me give him a check and make! The same principle as when crossing things from the to-do list that I lo-o-o-ve. Wait a minute, Leslie... You don't appreciate by taking notes and running records in your managed Read? Yes! Taking note is the most meaningful way I track what my students are doing. For me, it's great for scheduling lessons or reorganizing my groups. Then why this extra part? I felt like with the implementation of the common core of the nucleus mentioning reading strategies at the beginning of the school year meant that I needed to communicate more regularly with my parents, which I saw. I could send home running record data... Um, yes, that's right. So I created this half-page form to communicate with parents in a simple and effective way. What I have learned is that my good appreciate it as a form of immediate feedback and is usually happy to getta love kindergarten to practice strategies even more. Sometimes I stick it in a book (like one of their bookmark reminders) that goes home with them. This helps me communicate these common core standards: K.RF.4. Read emerging-reader texts with purpose and understanding. K.RF.4.a. Use self-correcting strategies when reading simple sentences. K.RL.4.e. Understanding and using patch strategies. K.RL.4.e-1. Use photos to find out unknown words. K.RL.4.e-2. Break the words into sounds to read unknown words. K.RL.4.e-3. Chunky unknown words are parted to read unknown words. Do you make this checklist for everyone kinder every time you meet them? Nope.I just use these managed strategies to read checklists to communicate on a semi-regular basis and as I feel needed. I've found that if I keep them handy, then whenever I run the record it's just a tick (or two) from sending home as an upgrade for parents. If you have my managed reading products, you'll love that it's consistent with reading strategy icons!
