The lincoln lawyer tv show

Just yesterday, Collider reported that Amazon had struck a deal for Lisbeth Salander's books by Stieg Larsson, including The Girl with the Dragon Tattoo, and according to a new THR report, the streamer laid his eyes on another literary hero - Mickey Haller, who is also known as The Lincoln Lawyer. Before we dive into Amazon's growing literary strategy, let's go back first. According to author Michael Connelly, CBS was days before it began production of its own Lincoln Lawyer series starring Logan Marshall-Green (The Invitation), when the city in which it was supposed to be closed due to the pandemic. And then, a month later, [CBS] decided not to move on with it, Connelly said. Why was CBS so apprehensive about pursuing the high-profile legal drama that came from Emmy winner David E. Kelley? Well, Attorney Lincoln would have been a little different from the network's standard crime procedures where the show would be serialized rather than episodic, so viewers would have to watch each episode to make sense of the story instead of being able to get in and out of the show as they pleased. Image via Lionsgate It was a bit risky for them and they decided, in this environment, not to do any risky programming, and so they basically killed her, explained Connelly in an upcoming episode of the Bestselling podcast by Natalie Jamieson and Phil Williams. It was a shock. I mean, we had defined actors, we had defined directors, we had sets being built. I was on the precipice of coming true when it happened. So it's very disappointing. Although CBS chose not to proceed with the show, other suitors quickly came calling, including Amazon. The streamer may be especially interested due to the fact that it already has Bosch, which is in its sixth season, and is based on the series of books by Connelly Harry Bosch. In fact, Attorney Lincoln is Bosch's half-brother, which would allow the two shows to have crossover episodes. For me, that's a good sales pitch because then you could have these people and the universe. yes, you could have people crossing paths and all that sort of stuff. It would be fun to do, said Connelly, who previously saw The Lincoln Lawyer adapted for the big screens, with Matthew McConaughey playing the title character. Image via Lionsgate I hope Amazon will make a deal for Lincoln Lawyer, even if only because it attracts the same book-loving audience to whom the streamer has focused on catering. In addition to Bosch, Amazon also has a Jack Ryan series starring John Krasinski, and based on the bestselling series by Tom Clancy. In recent months, Amazon has announced new programs centered around Lee Child's military investigator, Jack Reacher, and Detective Alex Cross, James Patterson, with heroin hacker Lisbeth Salander joining the guys from if only Amazon could take Lincoln Rhyme and Kay Scarpetta (in development from 2018) away from NBC, then it would really control the main characters in the adult publishing world. Frankly, this strategy makes a lot of sense for Amazon as it's hard to find a good IP out there nowadays, and best-selling book series have reliable fan bases. Seriously, when I go to the airport and see a new Alex Cross mystery on the shelves, I don't need to read the book cover for a synopsis, nor do I care about the price. It's a blind purchase for me. and, I imagine, millions of others around the world. Amazon could cast O.J. Simpson as Alex Cross and I would probably watch the show. So the streamer is smart to embrace this Dream Team of literary heroes, which will surely bring new eyes to Prime Video. Sure, only time will tell if this strategy is worth it, but I think Amazon is on the right track here. Photo by Stephen Lovekin/Shutterstock EXCLUDESVE: This is a shock —CBS is not proceeding with The Lincoln Lawyer, its high-profile legal drama by The Practice creator David E. Kelley, based on Michael Connelly's bestselling novel series. The project had a huge commitment to serial production. His Complete Guide to Pilots and Direct Orders for Series I heard that the studios of Lincoln Lawyer, A+E Studios and CBS TV Studios were informed on Friday of the network's decision. This is believed to be the first official passage of a 2020 pilot pilot season project. More are expected to come from all transmission networks as they are trying to make decisions about pilots who were not shot because all production was shut down by the coronavirus pandemic. CBS is expected to step up its series capture, renewal and cancellation activity next week as it prepares for the network's May 13 special that will replace its initial presentation this year. Even in the context of a highly irregular pilot season decimated by the pandemic, the pass on Lincoln's Lawyer is a jaw-dropping one, as it's a well-known title, comes from one of the leading legal drama makers in the business, Kelley, and has had a huge commitment. I've heard that no force major has yet been relied on, but both sides are yet to get into the sharpness of resolving the series penalty. It is not yet clear whether the main studio A+E Studios would buy the series elsewhere; is a likely scenario. Much has changed since CBS preemptively purchased Lincoln Lawyer exactly a year ago with a serial production commitment. The network's parent company, CBS Corp. merged with Viacom, and the combined company has financial challenges that have resulted in waves of layoffs. There was also a change at the top of the CBS brand assets, with George Cheeks Cheeks president and CEO of CBS Entertainment Group for just over a month. When production of all CBS pilots ended on Friday, March 13, Lincoln Lawyer was in the final stages of pre-production. The cast was assembled, including closing a complex deal with Logan Marshall-Green for leadership that took weeks of negotiations. With production suspended, the project's executive producer/showrunner, Ted Humphrey, was allowed to open a writers' room with three other writers and Connelly intimately involved. By the time CBS made the decision not to proceed with the show, the network's boss had received two scripts, Kelley's original pilot script, and one by Humphrey and his team, with two more in progress. A+E Studios was working on possible production schedules for when Hollywood filming resumes under new safety guidelines. It's standard practice for 13-episode committed projects to shoot a pilot episode and pause for the network and studio to evaluate creatively before filming of the remaining episodes begins. Under extraordinary circumstances this year, other broadcast projects with commitments similar to Lincoln Lawyer, who also planned to film a pilot during the regular pilot season, are going straight into the series' production. The list includes Kelley's other hour-long project, The Big Sky on ABC, as well as the comedy Call Me Kat on Fox. The Lincoln Lawyer focuses on Mickey Haller, an iconoclastic idealist, who runs his advocacy on the back of his Lincoln Town Car, while he takes on cases large and small throughout the spouting city of Los Angeles. Kelley produces executives with Connelly, Humphrey and Ross Fineman. Sign up for Deadline Breaking News Alerts and keep your inbox happy.
