What started out as a line of accessible and high-quality aloe vera products eventually expanded into our current diverse skin and solar care ranges. Along the way, we improved our focus on including home and bath and body products, but we never abandoned our commitment to creating effective, nature-inspired formulations. At fruit of the earth, we care as much about where our ingredients come from as we do about where they are going. Therefore, the aloe used in our products is carefully grown and harvested, as well as ethically from a fair trading producer. We also formulate all our products in-house to ensure that only the best goes in everything we make. We've always been based in Texas, and every step of the production process, from initial concept to distribution, happens here in the Lone Star state. We pride ourselves on our Texas roots, and of American-made and family owned. Passion for the company and its mission is one of our family traditions, and it carries through in everything we do.
