About American Express Amex (The American Express Company) is a well-known multinational financial services company headquartered in New York City. The company was founded in 1850 is quite famous for its payment cards, credit cards and travel check companies. It also makes up one of the 30 parts of the Dow Jones Industrial Average. In 1958 Gladiator or Centurion, and they have successfully made their image printed on the company's passenger check, debit cards and credit cards. American Express started out as an express mail company in Buffalo, New York in 1850. It was started by Henry Wells, William G. Fargo and John Warren Butterfield by merging their instant company into Joint Stock Corporation. It was initially started at the headquarters at the intersection of Jay Street and Hudson Street, which later became known as the Tribeca part of Manhattan. It had a market monopoly on the movement of express shipments throughout New York for years. Later, in 1874, American Express moved its headquarters to 65 Broadway (a place it was to store through two buildings) that was becoming a financial district in Manhattan. In 1857, American Express ventured into the financial services industry by launching a money ordering business that competed with U.S. Post Office money orders. Once, when J.C. Fargo traveled to Europe and realized the difficulty of getting cash from non-metro cities with a traditional backpack, and introduced Traveler's Cheque in 1891 at a face value of $10, $20, $50 and $100, the British government appointed American Express as its official agent at the start of World War I. They used to deliver letters, money and aid packages to prisoners in the British War. There was also an attempt to arrange for workers to receive money from home to both British and French prisoners by visiting camps and getting drafts. By the end of the war, 150 tonnes a day of packages were delivered to prisoners distributed in six countries. During 1980, American Express began its journey to become a financial services super company and as an effort to acquire many organizations to create investment banking. Mid-1981; it bought I. Weill's Shearson Loeb Rhoades, ranked 2nd in the largest U.S. security company to make up Shearson or American Express. As per 2016 data on all credit cards, those using the American Express network accounted for 22.9% of the total credit card transaction in the United States. As on December 31, 2016, the company had 109.9 million active cards, of which 47.5 million were operating in the U.S. alone - each with an average annual consumption of $17,216. That same year, Interbrand issued a statement to American Express on 25 April 2005. The following year, Fortune ranked 17th in American Express in the world's most admired company. About American Express Credit Cards American Express offers a selection of cards that fit living lifestyles.
