Barry bonds baseball card fleer

Buy Barry Bond's Rookie CardsBarry Bonds (7/24/64) is one of the most famous left fielders of all time, playing for the Pirates and the Giants over 22 seasons. A 14-time All-Star, his stats and numbers are legendary among baseball fans. Bonds was the home run king, he is the all-time leader in walks, and owns a career 1,051 OPS. His last seasons in the league were actually some of his best! Barry Bonds' last season stats: 126 games – 28 HR – .276 average (2017)Despite controversy over steroid use, he is still a popular figure, and the Giants retired their number 25 shirt after his retirement. We've listed his best rookie card to look out for, as well as providing an investment outlook for the near future.1986 Barry Bonds Topps Traded Tiffany Rookie Card #11T (buy on eBay)The Topps Traded Tiffany Bonds Rookie Card is one of the most undervalued cards in any sport and would be worth triple the amount (maybe more) if he hasn't allegedly used PEDs.This is one of the most recognizable cards in the hobby as it has a picture of Bonds with bat in hand, the classic 1980s Pirates cap (who doesn't love this hat), with a sharp black, white and yellow motif to fit his Pirates jersey. Topps Tiffany versions were sold in a limited number, offering collectors higher quality cards compared to the base version. As with many of the others on this list, a pearl mint version will easily sell for four figures. They should be a good investment considering they went for $400 dollars just over a decade ago. When he breaks into the Baseball Hall of Fame (and he eventually will) this card will pop.1986 Barry Bonds Topps Traded #11T (buy on eBay)Pretty much exactly the same card as the above except more of them were produced. The card has exactly the same bright, bold yellow Pirates letters over the top is instantly recognizable to collectors.1987 Barry Bonds Topps Tiffany Rookie Pirates #320 (buy on eBay)Bonds Topps Tiffany cards have a wooden effect along the boundary, with a picture of the player after a clean hit. The reverse has detailed statistics about his 85/'86 seasons, as well as mentioning that he majors in criminal justice. That's another interesting option if you're looking at cheaper Bonds rookie cards, although gem mint versions have picked up in value in recent years. A PSA 10 version shows a good trajectory in the middle to long term. 1987 Barry Bond's O-Pee-Chee RC #320 (buy on eBay)Vintage O-Pee-Chee cards are often desirable, and Bond's 1987 version is no different. The image shows Bonds smashing a shot into the sky, with a Pittsburgh Pirates logo prominent. O-Pee-Chee released Canadian alternatives to many popular Topps cards (Pete Alonso Topps Polar Bear Card), and this one is the most expensive Bond rookie card that wasn't released by mistake. The limit makes it particularly difficult to find card in pristine condition, which is one of the main reasons why it is so expensive on higher grades. A gem mint version will set you back 4 digits.1987 Barry Bonds Leaf Rookie Pirates #219 (buy on eBay)Another Bonds rookie card with that retro Pirates cap (it somewhat resembles a leader hat but we love it!). The card also has another close-up image of Barry that makes us wonder if he was vain enough to ask for these in some of his early rookie short photo shoots. Above were the 5 ... here are other Barry Bonds rookie cards worth watching... 1986 Barry Bond's Donruss Rookies #11 (buy on eBay)Another close-up head-shot of Bonds on one of his early cards... image that ©Card is numbered #11 and again features what we now call pirates leader hat ... maybe he asked to wear this too! Either way, a nice Barry Bond's rookie card at an affordable price.1987 Barry Bond's Classic Travel Update Green Back Rookie #113 (buy on eBay)We start with an affordable card, which has a good picture and an eye-catching limit. The 1987 Classic Travel Update features Bonds in the middle of the sprint, and as you may have guessed from the name, the back is green. You'll also find basic stats on the back, along with five classic baseball issues. Of the two versions to look out for, the green back is far more valuable than the yellow back. A gem mint version of the latter is worth about $40, while the green can go for over $400,1987 Barry Bond's Fleer Hottest Stars Rookie Card #5This Bonds rookie card is pretty unique looking like it shows Bonds with a canary yellow batting hat on while looking out into the distance with a slightly dazed look on his face. The card is numbered #5 and the back simply shows his stats to agree to his vital stats (i.e. height, weight).1987 Donruss Opening Day (Dark Jersey-Johnny Ray) Barry Bond's Error Card #163 Here is one of the better known wrong baseball cards ever printed (by mistake). Donruss produced the opening day with players from their first game of the 1987 season. One error, however, is the main reason why this card is one of the most expensive Bonds rookie options, as the picture actually shows Johnny Ray up front. The mistake was discovered quite quickly, so it is one of the rarest on our list. It is also expensive, as a PSA 9 will go into 4 digits. If you're just looking for gem mint, three PSA 10s (read PSA vs BGS) sold in 2018 for between $3,400 and $4,000. Prices are somewhat inflated, but it is difficult to find a more famous error card. It's ironic that the most expensive Barry Bonds card doesn't actually have the player, but it's typical when you're looking at advanced error cards. It is likely to remain as his most valuable rookie card for the foreseeable future, even if it is only for history. Problems from the past past to fade away in time, and he is still well liked. While his rookie cards come from the junk wax era, there are still a number of diamonds among the rough, especially when looking at some of the rarer options available. It's important to consider Hall of Fame issues that have affected his career after MLB. But support for Bond's claim has increased every year after his retirement, and it seems likely that he will eventually find his way into the Hall of Fame.Bonds will always be an icon and would be considered the best player fo ever step up to the plate for not for the PED issue. The majority of his high-end cards have retained value, and many are worth much more than they were ten years ago. If you can pick up his card on a swing, there is always room to make a profit. Investment Outlook: STRONG BUYOwnership Disclosure: Three (3) PSA 10 1986 Topps Traded Tiffany Barry Bonds, baseball's single-season and all-time home run leader, is one of the most contentious players in the modern game. And yet, Barry Bond's card, especially his earliest options, is a worthy addition to any personal collection. Look back at the essential cardboard for Bonds, including his most popular rookie cards and newer autographs. Bonds was born into baseball royalty as his father Bobby Bonds held the record for the most 30/30 seasons (home runs and stolen bases) and his godfather was the legendary Willie Mays. With career longevity and consistency rivalling that of Hank Aaron, Bonds hit 30 or more home runs for 13 consecutive seasons between 1992 and 2004. His seven MVP awards, won while playing for both the Pittsburgh Pirates and San Francisco Giants, are an unprecedented record. Statistically, very few other players are more deserving of a trip to Cooperstown. But the steroid scandal that haunted the latter part of his career added an asterisk to his legacy and has kept the Hall of Fame waiting. Shop for Barry Bond's autograph cards on eBay.Even so, Barry Bonds baseball cards remain very popular, especially those with limited editions, such as Refractors available in the 1997 and 1998 Topps Finest or Precious Metals inserts in the 1998 Donruss Preferred. While several Barry Bonds rookie cards make the list, additional options include the 1986 Sportflics Rookies, the 1987 Classic Update Yellow Travel Edition, and the 1987 Topps Toys R Us Rookies set. It is important to point out that many collectors usually assign rookie short designation to both the 1986 update sets and his first appearances in the various 1987 flagship sets. As his popularity grew, Bonds became the first player to withdraw from the MLB Player Association licensing agreement. This meant that baseball card makers had to figure out contracts with Bonds directly to be included in their sets. As a case of of his career career after he retires. Although the card value is the most important deciding factor for inclusion on the list, the focus was on baseball cards from the beginning of Bond's career. Links in the descriptions go directly to set or player profiles. 10. 1987 Fleer Baseball's Hottest Stars Barry Bonds #5One of the lesser-known Bonds rookie cards can be found in the small 1987 Fleer Baseball hottest Stars that were made exclusively for the Revco pharmacy chain. The red, white and blue border makes the card one of my personal favorites for Bonds. Of course, he's the highlight of the 44-card edition. Sold as a complete set in a small paper box, collectors also received six team logo stickers.9. 1987 Fleer Glossy Barry Bonds RC #604The competition between Fleer Glossy and Topps Tiffany started in 1987 with the launch of Fleer's first premium set. The glossy cards became the top version for Fleer collectors due to the more limited pressure driving and higher quality product. It is estimated that 100,000 glossy sets were created, making the production about three times as good as the Tiffany version.8. 1987 Donruss Opening Day Barry Bonds #163 (Wrong/Corrected)1987 Donruss Opening Day was true to its name as it featured the starting lineups for all 26 teams to start the year. The 1987 Donruss offshoot that itself is not too interesting, with one major exception: a remarkable Barry Bond error card. When Donruss originally released #163, the card attributed to Bonds actually featured Pirates second baseman Johnny Ray. Since Bonds was one of the best players in the league, the error was quickly fixed and reissued. As a result, not many of the error cards did so on the secondary market. Ray/Bond's error cards often outperform other Barry Bond rookies at auction because of its scarcity, but it can only climb so far on this list because it only has Bonds by name.7. 2017 Tops Gypsy Queen Barry Bond's Autograph #GQA-BBFor nearly a decade after Bonds stopped playing in 2007, he was nowhere to be found in MLB card sets. With the controversy surrounding steroid scandals, Bonds was considered persona non grata for some collectors, and baseball management, as well. Time seems to have healed the wounds to some extent, and Barry Bond's autographs began to resurface in 2016 Topps Five Star. The trend continued in several 2017 products like this beautiful look in the 2017 Topps Gypsy Queen.He has also signed Topps cards in 2017 Finest, 2017 Tier One and 2017 Tribute.6. 1986 Fleer Update Barry Bond's RC #U-14The first Barry Bond rookie card featured from the 1986 expansion set comes in the 1986 Fleer Update. The deep blue border accents the bright yellow The Pirates jersey colors nicely to make for an interesting look card. The 132-card factory is still one of the cheapest options for Bond's rookie collector.5. In 1993 Topps Finest Refractor Barry Bonds #103Members of the 1992 All-Star team was named Baseball's Finest All-Stars in the premiere edition of Topps Finest in 1993. After winning his second MVP award in 1992, Bonds led the league with 46 home runs the following year. As we all know, he would go on to hit more homers than any other player in baseball history, but he would only top the league in home runs another time. This came in 2001 when he hit 73 home runs to set the single-season record.4. The 1986 Donruss The Rookies' Barry Bonds RC #11Bonds' 1986 Donruss The Rookies card features him wearing the three-striped Pirates cap that became famous during the We Are Family World Series-winning Pirates team in the late 1970s. In 1987, the team would stop using that hat design together. Speaking of changing patterns, rookies expansion that borrowed the 1986 Donruss design but swapped the blue system for a green. Barry Bond's rookie card is by far the most valuable in the 56-card set.3. 1997 /1998 Donruss Signature Series Barry Bond's Autograph Erave it's not his first certified autograph card, the 1997 and 1998 Donruss Signature Series offers some of the most important Barry Bond autographs from his previous years. While he previously had autographs in the 1993 Classics, they weren't of very good quality. Today, the 1997 Donruss Signature edition on the left is more elusive than 1998 (right) but neither is good. Bonds only signed for Millennium Marks (400 copies) and Century Marks (100 copies) parallels in each set. Barry's signature may vary slightly in that some autographs have almost every letter of his name clearly readable while most others tend to focus on B in Barry and B and S in Bonds.2. 1987 Topps Tiffany Barry Bond's RC #320The popularity Topps products across all other card makers are made clear given that Bond's 1987 Topps card surpasses his 1986 debuts in the Donruss and Fleer sets. Production of the Tiffany version is approximately 30,000 sets, making the limited release the preferred card to collect. Barry's rookie season saw him lead National League rookies in home runs, RBIs, and stolen bases, but he finished only sixth in Rookie of the Year voting, falling far behind the St. Louis Cardinals reliever and ROY winner, Todd Worrell.1. 1986 Topps Traded Tiffany Barry Bonds RC #11TAlong with Mark McGwire's U.S. Olympic 1985 Topps team rookie card and Ken Griffey Jr.'s rookie in the 1989 Upper Deck, Barry Bond's rookie card in the 1986 Topps Traded Tiffany is a clear highlight among the best baseball cards of the 1980s. It is estimated that only 5,000 Tiffany versions were created for the '86 Topps Traded set. on supply, it appears that almost all have been graded and made available on the secondary market. Market.
