Picture: CasarsaGuru/E+/GettyImages It's hard to say today when comparing softball to baseball, but there was a reason softball was invented back in 1887. The game was meant to be played indoors as a way to ensure you could still have some baseball fun even if the weather outside was moody af. As a result, the playing field shrunk slightly, which made the distance between the bases and, of course, the size of the ball changed. The ball also became softer to make it less of a destructive piece of equipment for indoor play. Then we moved everything outdoors again, but the rules remained the game before. It's not baseball in the way rugby isn't football. They are similar sports, but they are not the same and they should not be the same. What they're supposed to be is competitive and fun, and they definitely qualify as both.
