Advertising Advertising Photo: New Line Cinemalt is going to be a beautiful summer weekend. (Maybe - we don't know where you live.) We know how tempting it is to go out and see other people, but Josh Gad has other plans for you on Sunday. That's when he's turning into an upcoming episode of his quarantine YouTube series, Reunited Apart into the Lord of the Rings reunion and fundraiser. Based on a short teaser video that has already been released, we already know some things about this reunion. For starters, it includes many cast favorites, including Sean Astin (who plays Samwise Gamgee), Sir Ian McKellen (Gandalf), Elijah Wood (Frodo Baggins), Orlando Bloom (Legolas), Dominic Monaghan (Merry Brandybuck) and Billy Boyd (Pippin Took). This also includes McKellen drinking a well-deserved glass of red wine. But wait, there's more! Lord of the Rings director Peter Jackson and actors Andy Serkis, Karl Urban, Viggo Mortensen, Mirando Otto, John Rhys-Davies, Sean Bean and Liv Tyler will also join Zoom in on the call. The charity event for the COVID-19 charity strikes a particular close to this group's home. The cast and crew of the Lord of the Rings movies recently announced the death of their colleague Andrew Jack, a dialect coach in the series who died in April aged 76 from complications from COVID-19. And this isn't Adi's first reunion rodeo. He previously reunited with the cast of two hit films in 1985: The Goonies and Back to the Future. Earlier this week, he brought Tom Hanks, Daryl Hannah, Eugene Levy and Ron Howard together to discuss his 1984 classic Splash. Pr/ O Media can receive commissions in each episode, Gad raises money for a charity linked to COVID-19. Previous organizations have included Project HOPE (a global health and humanitarian organization), DigDeep (work to ensure every American has water and sanitation access) and the Center for Disaster Filanthropy (supporting those hardest hit by the COVID-19 pandemic). I made it to farmer's market carving contest and the contest that Turbine was Lord of the Rings Online. Took farmer's market first! It took me about 3 1/2 hours to carve and about an hour to plan. I planned it first with an illustrator, and I used this picture as a reference when I drew it on a pumpkin, it's itself. On the left side is All Seeing Eye, ring then the whole fraternity on the right side. Enjoy! Participated in the Halloween Contest Hey Boys and Girls! This is just a photo update for my latest project ... Sauron, come here! This part is a helmet and the rest of the vests are coming soon! I hope you enjoy the pictures = D !! That step was the most nerve-racking thing for me. I originally started to go for this Dremel rotating tool, but every once in a while I slip and gouge out a huge piece of MDF. Luckily, it wasn't yet the place where it mattered, but I decided that I would continue using only hand tools. So, blade, I used a grinding block. I started with an 80 grit piece and honed at an angle so that the blade would look like having an edge. I polished up the side of the blade was an angle, and about half the width of the sheet MDF was taken out of the edge. Repeat the other three edges of the process. Then I went down to 150 grit, and then under 220 grit. This made the edge a little sharper, which is ok but not glued. Finally, my edge thickness was about half the width of the sheet of MDF (about 1/16" or 1.5mm). I used my chisel to give the cross-border guard my original shape. If you're not comfortable using chisel, you can just use low grit sandpaper, it just takes more time. Crossguard follows the same basic shape as the blade, but with a slightly sharper angle. After the chisel, under the sand until there are two sheets of MDF at the top. The only detail you need to keep in mind during the process is the overlapping lip in the middle of the cross. I messed up a little bit here that I did one side crossguard mirror image of another when they should have looked the same when flipped over. If you have it looking as you like, take 150 grit and then 220 grit to make it nice and smooth. Next, shape the grip. This is probably the easiest part of the shape because you just need to make it oval. The same basic process as the blade here: start with low dirt (I used 80) to get the main shape, and go high grit to get it smooth. The only detail is that he must come off towards pommel. It should come out 4 MDF page widths. It's so grip fits pommel. Finally, the shape of the pommel. This step is most artistically involved. It is difficult to explain the exact shape, other than the basic rounding. The pictures are probably more illuminating. Same process here though: start with low grit, work high grit. The last image shows The cross-sections went out like me. The cursor is a sword that becomes one of the rings when the computer is busy. Icons are small pictures of the protagonists. There are very few sounds, mainly clashing swords--but with a nice touch, the error messages are chilling Nazgul cry. Screen
