While bringing envelopes of cash for the day and wrapped in wedding gifts for acceptance (rather than shipping them directly from the wedding register to the couple's home) may seem more, they are, in fact, not. Any wedding planner will tell you that more often than not, a handful of guests end up bringing wedding gifts to the reception, only to end up wandering around the miserable trying to figure out leave them. To keep the confusion to a minimum and help streamline the gift of the ity, we asked wedding planner and registry expert extraordinaire Jung Lee that guests should give their wedding gifts at the reception. First, Lee recommends choosing the designated person responsible for collecting wedding gifts, because not planning ahead of time can explain the trouble. When people bring gifts to weddings and there is no one special who is responsible for it as a planner, gifts and cards are usually lost or, worse, stolen, says Lee. Couples prefer gifts sent to them before or after the wedding. But with that said, we know that there are guests who prefer and will give gifts for the wedding. Instead of decorating a box or birdcage on a gift table, Lee recommends finding a separate room in which to store gifts and cards, and one trusted person to take them from guests and store them there. It seems to me that bad taste is a box because it is perceived as asking for money. But another issue with this approach is that it shows everyone who is an opportunist where all the money is. Unfortunately, you have to think that its sometimes, even in a joyous occasion like a wedding! Most places have a safe space for a couple or bridal party to keep all their personal items. If not, gifts can be with a coat to check, as is usually safe, or ask your catering director if they can offer a private office or other space to hold gifts. Usually your wedding planner or coordinator is available to collect your guest's gifts and store them in that room (just be sure to confirm with them in advance!). But if you haven't hired one, appoint either a maid of honor or the best man as the keeper of the gifts. Before the ceremony, ask them to take all the cards and gifts as they arrive and put them in a safe room. As guests give cards to you or your partner, simply put them back to this wedding party member who can then take them to a safe storage area. Tip for a person collecting all wedding gifts? I like all the cards so everyone goes in one bag or container, which is then placed in another larger bag that remains closed, explains Lee. In this way, all cards are consolidated at the end of the night. Now that's one less thing you have to worry about! See More: 50 Unique Wedding Gift Ideas That Fit All Of Your Guests' Budgets
