I like to see people catching fish. I love teaching, says Johnson, an Oregon native who has been running a charter fishing service at Tillamook for the past 10 years. Johnson is one of dozens of licensed fishing companies and guides working year-round on the Oregon coast, offering visitors a way to experience the thrill of fishing without the hassle of securing your own fishing gear - including a boat, which provides access to more river, bay or ocean. Like other instructors, David Johnson's instructor service serves everyone from beginners to experienced anglers. Every season is something new. On each boat, the permissible guide brings his or her personality, stories and expertise to the small group on board. They share their techniques as well as knowledge of how to call a particular fishing location, which is why even experienced fishermen hire a guide if they are new to the area. I love the puzzle of it, says Johnson. I come to the place and look at it and say, 'Okay, like the current, the fish should be at this point, and this technique has to work. When everything comes together and catches a fish, it's the satisfaction. Some guides began offering special trips throughout the year to target a particular audience. For instance, Johnson's wife, Tasha, offers about half a dozen fish trips like a glamorous gift to women only throughout the year, which she hosts along with other women. Guides focus on teaching and spending time on the boat in a comfortable and non-threatening environment. NW Girls Gone Fishing is another group led by women who organises women-only trips with training and equipment like As friendship. Perhaps the best part of any guided trip is processing your loot and packing the vacuum in the dock for a small surcharge - ready to pack in a cooler for that night's freezer or dinner. Charter Fishing offers the thrill of fishing without the hassle of securing your equipment. (Photo credit: Garibaldi Charter) On average, Lingcod caught in Oregon waters can average between 2 and 3 feet. (Photo credit: Visit Tillmook Beach) Oregon's southern coast is famous for its hard-lying king salmon (Chinook) in the ocean between May and early September, as well as two weeks in October at the mouth of theChenro River. In spring, delicious lingok and rockfish (think fish and chips) swim minutes from the harbour at Brookings Fishing Charter and Sharky's Charters out of Coos Bay. The busy harbours along the central coast also like to cater to visitors. Yaquina Bay Charter tours depart from the marina at Newport's Embarcadero Resort, en route to tuna, salmon, halibut or the best rockfish of the day. Charter fishing trips depart from Florence's Sicilew River, known for some of the best fishing around. On the north coast, Stookum fishing charters from Astoria are working with the Lower Columbia River as its playground, with giant sturgeon and crab pots at their fingertips. Embarked on a day of ocean fishing with a Garibaldi charter, part of the North Shore Food Trail. In Pacific City, Eagle Charter is a licensed doric boat fisherman outside the Cape Kiwanda state nature zone, where boats go surfing in its unique conditions. Excursions can focus on sea bass, lingcod, rockfish, crab, halibut or salmon, depending on the season. Outfitters work year-round on the Oregon coast, offering opportunities for river and ocean fishing. (Photo credit: Jarrett Juarez) Guides follow the fish calendar as they lead year-round trips: Steelhead January to April; Spring salmon April to June; August autumn salmon on the Columbia River and September to December elsewhere; And June and July in Colombia. Book ahead. Although you can book a winter trip at short notice, high-season tours are often filled six months in advance. Plan ahead. Inspire trips to inspiration and a list of companies and guides licensed by the Oregon State Sea Council. Come on, let's go. Check with your guide about what's provided. Some may purchase a fishing license for you for one day. Others will ask you to buy it in advance. Some may provide meals, such as a fresh dinner of that day's catch. Waterproof clothing is essential - boots and layers for protection against wind and cold, in summer and also in winter. In winter, people can be a good idea. Guides will work with you to make sure you are ready for the trip. Just don't forget your sense of adventure. With Sibs on Facebook. Looks like one of the seats was empty and asked if I wanted to fill it. Who can say no to their mother? So I meet her, bro, and another guy monday morning to chase springers near the OC under Tim's guidance. Quite a few boats out there, some action going on. There's a female instructor out there, I think her name is Julie, which we watch put two fish in a boat before we touch the fish. I ask Tim, man, are you going to let the girl out of you? Tim made us use some looms rods that are so sensitive they could feel the extra fin on the fish and release them automatically. That way we wasted no time messing with the network. However, the rods were not negligent twice and forced us to manually release two indigenous people. But the other four would comb... I mean, automatically released. My mom finally put a guard on the boat towards the end of the day. I haven't bined all day. But I think it's because Tim knew who was paying for this trip. I also accused him of having a liberal boat since all the bites came on the left side of the boat. However, I admit it may be the fact that I'm standing on the right.... Being a boat owner I rarely fish with a guide, but I notice their actions on the river. I think boat owners/operators notice things about operators and other guides that those who don't boats can't. Like how they operate in traffic, their ethics around banks, etc. This is great Tim. He would ask banks if he interrupted before we took down the hall, he asked some boats if he was invading their waters, etc. He's a great guy with great ethics and attitude. He got the boat for some fish, and my mom went squabbling with three Springers that day with one for a barbecue. I'm still missing fish at Spanaway. I fished with Tim Jurez and he's just as kind as you describe. 04-22-2003, 05:22 pm #5 Ifish Knight Join Date: December 2001 Location: Portland Posts: 3,046 Re: Tim Juarez = First Class Go Hurley: I couldn't agree more on your experience with Tim. First class. However, you might consider editing your post to reflect its real last name. It's Juarez, not Lopez. Anyway, glad you enjoyed the trip. Good people who offer great service. What more could you ask for?

I've been on a lot of polite trips through my job and Tim's the best. He's been continuing the conversation all day and he's very passionate about being around. I was with as much as it is like you want to get out of the boat and come home after a few hours because they seem angry at the world or just don't enjoy their work. 04-22-2003, 09:38 #9 King Salmon Join Date: January 2002 Location: tillamook or Posts: 5,872 Re: Tim Juarez = First Class I've known Tim for a long time and I love spanking him----- He's the best there is. He really enjoys what he does. I would never tell him he's also really good at what he does, because he'd think I was just throwing him a -----. I'm telling you, he's got some high rollers flying in to go fishing with him. April 24, (you know the Cyaam debate about keeping our peder) is paying another guide to fish them out so that he can join us all in Cylam to help our cause. He's also burying his boat. I hope a lot of other instructors will do the same, as will all of you. Thank you. « Previous Thread | Next Thread » Registration Rules May Not Publish New Threads May Not Publish Comments May Not Publish Attachments May Not Edit HTML Code Messages Off They're GMT-8.
