Face it: you've often dreamed of an ongoing, personal TV schedule so you don't miss out or have to search for an episode of Mad Men, NCIS and Project Runway. You also don't want to hear that the cable network has been running an all-day Law & Order marathon: SVU. Maybe your wishes are a little more practical—like putting restrictions on your children by printing the shows they're allowed to watch. Either way, you'll delight family members by creating a personal TV schedule that's smooth enough to update regularly. For reference, consult a guide (newspaper, magazine, internet or broadcast). Make a list of programs you don't want to miss or those your children can watch with your blessing. Include in the list shows that you were eager to watch but missed because the printed TV program is too crowded to find them. Start your computer and software of your choice. Specify an 8.5x11 portrait document. Select the Index and Tables command under the Insert tab if you are doing a graphic on your Microsoft Word TV or other word processing program. Excel and other spreadsheets will provide a network when you open the page. Select and use similar commands found in the page layout program. Design a banner at the top of your TV's schedule that's customized for family members. Drag or insert a text box at the top of the page. Customize the document by, for example, writing mom's TV schedule in uppercase letters at the top. Customize a TV program for your kids by placing their names on the banner. Add your photos to a graphic by inserting, importing, or dragging picture and photo boxes into the banner. Drag or insert an eight-column text box under the identification banner. The setting of the left column must be the widest because you will insert the program names vertically into this column. The other seven will have headers that read from Sunday to Saturday. If you want to make finding programs really easy, add a ninth column to the right of each show's name and key to the channel number or station call letters. Enter the names of your programs for the week with the accompanying hours, starting with the earliest shows on Sundays. Use the document as a template for future changes, such as frequently monitored programming being moved to different time slots, canceled shows, and new programs. Update the schedule every week so you always have a new list of programming notifications at your fingertips. Would you like to impress the guests? Customize a TV schedule with their names. Place the sheet on their bed. What better way to make them feel welcome, put them on the number of local stations so that they do not carry the remote control of the guest room, looking for 11 p.m. news.
