Before we start discussing the various tools to help you locate your loved one, let's quickly make it clear that you will need to have some vital identification information at hand to do so. This information includes: Your loved one's full legal name (first, middle, and last) Your date of birth The state in which EnNote is located that some tools may suggest or require additional information from you about your loved one, depending on individual circumstances As we go through this list, we will make clear what this information is and where it is applicable. Now, for the inmate's location tools. As we said, the BOP search tool only displays the results for federal inmates. To find an inmate who is being held in a local jail or state prison, you'll want to use the government website of the state in which your loved one is located. While we're not going to take you through the step-by-step process of finding an inmate in each state, let's take a look at some examples: Here's what you'll need if your loved one is incarcerated in New York: Keep in mind that your department identification number or New York State identification number is meant to be used on their own. In other words, if you include any of these numbers, you don't need to include the inmate's name and year of birth. Similarly, to find an inmate in California, you will need to enter your full legal name or inmate number if you know. While most states provide the ability to search for an inmate on their official government website, others use a third-party search tool, which we will discuss in the next section. The Bureau of Prisons allows you to search your federal prisoner database in order to locate your loved one and discover your contact information. Please note that this database includes only inmates held in federal prisons: we will reach smaller prisons and prisons in a moment. The BOP database also includes information on inmates who have been released, dating back to 1982. By using the BOP search tool, you can search for a prisoner by name or by a variety of identification numbers. First, let's look for an inmate using your name: Again, finding a common name without any additional information leads to a number of search results. Also, keep in mind that the search engine limits the number of results to 100, which means that a lot of other inmates named John Smith didn't even appear. Obviously, you're not likely to face this problem, but it's definitely good to know. In any case, you can also narrow your search by including race, age, age, Sex. Because this search tool does not offer any advanced search features, you may need to include this information to see fewer than 100 results. You can also search for a federal inmate using a number of different identification numbers, such as: BOP Registration Number DCCDC FBI Number INS Because these identification numbers, of course, belong only to your loved one, using this method is the best way to generate accurate results from the BOP site.
