The average price for 1950s and 1960s models is between $500 and $800, while the asking price for 70s and 80s versions is about $1,500 to more than $2,000. A Shopsmith is a 5-in-1 home woodworking system. In 2014, current ones include a table saw, a drill press, a disc sander, a tower and a horizontal drilling machine. The original producer of Shopsmith was Magna Corporation. In 1972, Shopsmith Incorporated began producing Mark V models in the United States. - Starter Discussion - #1 - February 3, 2012 I've never liked them, but they're all over Craigs List and CHEAP. Might be nice to have one around just for the ride (I don't one lap). I see them listed for $300 several times, and that includes some accessories. Even the annoying horizontal thing could be useful. Or the disk sander. I'm not keen on the table seen, but it could serve a purpose. I mean, it just seems like these things are everywhere for sale and I know they sell for over $3000 new. - If you want a ride, buy a ride, not a wannabe transformer. - If you want a ride, buy a ride, not a wannabe transformer. I have to agree. Shop Smith is ideal for a limited store. Otherwise, I'm inclined to use the single-purpose tool. Usually get better results from a tool made for specific work. - Yes, I've never owned one myself, but if people sell them for pennies on the dollar that should tell you something. In general, machines that out do nothing very well. However, a variable speed drill, sander, turn if only used for hobby projects can be OK. I hate turnaround times, so I only have dedicated machines. ... Well almost. I have a 13 jointr/glider Min Max, but I've never used the glider except to test it. The dust collection flip is a PITA. JMO. Bill I had one or a little. I hated it. I don't think you like it. Domer (c) I have owned and used the same for over 30 years. Solid and reliable machine. Great as a drilling press. Excellent disc sander. A proper ride. Horizontal or sloping holes are a wink. I worked with mine long enough to realize and compensate for the inadequacies of the table saw. He built a number of kitchens, several exterior doors and was involved in many home renovations and two houses built from scratch. Now it's just an amateur machine. If you find one for $300, you'll probably get some accessories with it. Usually a group has seen and tower tools. You might even find one with the largest table for that price. - I made one that was given to me, probably a vintage from the 30s or 40s, when a friendly father died. At the time, I found it very useful, having no room for a real shop. He had a lot of accessories, but it lacked a very important element; The instructions. He had a large disc sander and paper sanding discs; I had no idea how to attach them if used rubber cement. The next day he pulled up and, uh, guess you're also supposed to slow him down; A lot. This disc detached and flew into the basement like a deadly frisbie. I hit the ground and escaped unscathed, but didn't learn my lesson: no. You have to slow it down when using the scroll saw too. good thing it was heavy or it would have vibrated itself through the ground. I think it may be useful, but some things, like the uit de tabl are downright dangerous. - I think it may be useful, but some things, like the uit de tabl are downright dangerous. My FIL has had its since the new one in the late 70s-early 80s, and he's thinking about passing it on to me soon. I've already told him it will never be used again a table has seen because as you say, it is too dangerous. I thought he would only see the use as a trick and maybe the band saw. Only time will tell, however... There is a reason why you see them listed on Craigslist all the time. Wow, a lot of sarcasm. My dad had the Montgomery neighborhood wants to be. (Not an impressive tool.) Seriously, Bud. If it were me, I'd be looking for a ride on CraigsList. I also think that Gene's assessment that there are things you can do with the Smith Shop, but I would ask do you really want to do all these things? Wow, a lot of sarcasm. If you just look at the tower function, there are better options. - Starter Discussion - #12 - February 5, 2012 Thanks guys. I guess I'm going to look for a ride. I wouldn't be surprised if you could find someone on CL just give it to if you want to carry it away. My BIL has one in the basement and I know he would welcome someone who would come and take it with his hands just so he wouldn't have to carry it down the stairs. - Wow, a lot of sarcasm. Author: The Other Casualty Of War I've had a SM 10ER (Orig. v belt drive) model since about 1978. At the time, I had just had a ts. For the $100, I paid for it, (with tower accessories and scroll saw accessories) I enjoyed using it as a dp, 12 disc sander, scroll saw, foam, horizontal drilling, and a light weight thickness sander. While doing no function, as well as a dedicated machine, it makes me pass, when I need a turn or disk sander, or need to drill holes in long posts accurately. For these functions alone, I keep it under wraps in a corner of my shop. - TS3660 Senior Member Join Date: Mar 2008 Location: Ft. Mill, SC Posts: 1.317 My Thinking of buying a used shopsmith I never liked them but they are everywhere on Craigs List and CHEAP. Bud Veggi wow dude you don't think about buying any of these causes u seen everywhere what kind of woodworking guy doesn't use a table saw or a drill press or a trick or sander or some of the other great uses of a shop blacksmith.... since you just want a ride just buy a ride don't buy a blacksmith shop because everyone has one that is a douchbag that is just a part time. so you tell me all the other attachments are just going to collect dust in the corner because that's not what you wanted. what a douchbag. there are foams out there for less than 300 dollars if that's what you want to leave the real man toys for real men they have a lot of kiddy attractions out there. to want to be woodworkers having fun in the small children section..... if your bill would want to get rid of it, I would like to have it if it wants to crate it and ship it to Korea, I would pay for shipping if it just wants to be rid of the item with all the accessories right. my father had one for 39 years and I loved using it to guess everything you must have a love for wood to love a shop blacksmith.... but yes if he wants to be rid of asking him if he wants to ship it to someone who could use it abroad that I'm stationed in South Korea wow such a hate for a shop blacksmith yes its bulky, but show me another piece of equipment that has the same options and is also stable a base like a workshop. Starter Discussion - #19 - June 11, 2013 I'm confused. To say you hate a blacksmith, so you love him, so you hate it, but you'd buy one. I don't understand. - Hello! Our Shopsmith approach incorporates a bit of reverse engineering. We already have almost a hundred floor/bench assembly machines in our mid-size prototype workshop. We mention it for two reasons: 1) we need a wide variety of machines for what we do, and ... 2) All commissions are needed yesterday, just the nature of our business. Since we operate within these constraints, we cannot afford any machine to be down even once. Enter the store... 8 or so backup machines all within minutes of working through the work! No, the SS table seen scares us too! But don't have to buy 8 more spare parts (and deal with the space they take up... our shop is not unlimited in space... If there were no SS ability to turn into so many machines (medium sized), we would have lost too many customers due to lack of quality delivery time:yes! So yes, the Shopsmith, with all its shortcomings is a tool that we have come to respect and rely on! It's all about needs and from the point of view! There is a place in the woodwork for the Shopsmith: thumbsup:! Best, Marena and Vinny Vinny Vinny
