Registered trademarks are certain risks, the main risk is the trademark office has a blind monitoring period of 3-6 months, we will try our best to help you avoid the risk. The trademark is valid for 10 years from the date of approval and registration without any fees for 10 years and requires a one-year renewal before it expires. You can see it on the Trademark Classification page: Trademark category information is for informational purposes only, and if you have questions, you can contact our customer service. Trademark coloring after successful registration can only be used in the application time, do not change color. Black and white trademarks, you can use any color, address, submission, registration, trademark is based on a business license, but the content issued by the trademark office will be sent to the agent, we will contact you in time to receive the content and confirm the mailing address with you. Trademark rejection checks mean that after checking and denying the trademark registration, it will be issued. The applicant will not accept the reason and legal basis for the trademark office rejection and apply it to the Trademark Review Board to review and consider the original case. The trademark verification application must be filed within the legal period (within 15 days from the date of posting the rejection notice envelope). Reasons for the refusal of the Trademark Office must be discussed in the retrieval to pay the trademark verification fee. The protection of trademark objections refers to legal action that a person objecting to in a trademark objection lawsuit, rejecting the reason for the written objection within the legal period. In layman's terms, when the trademark filed for registration entered the objection period three months after the initial inspection was announced, the trademark objection process begins when it is objected by others. The applicant's right to use a particular trademark depends on the decision of the Trademark Office to challenge the trademark. Any different opinions regarding a pre-approved trademark may file an objection application with the Trademark Office within 3 months from the date of the preliminary inspection. If a registered trademark is transferred, the trademark registrar must transfer the same or similar trademark registered with the same or similar goods. Filing a registered trademark transfer should not result in misunderstandings, confusion or other consequences. It takes about 6 months to complete the transfer after sending the material to the trademark office. 4-6 months of 2-re-certificate and transfer will take place at the same time, and the trademark certificate will be printed with the transfer party information. Trademarks that receive trademark registration certificates or trademark registration acceptance notices may be traded and sold. Trademarks with trademark disputes registered under trademark pledges, if the first license agreement for record after transfer will affect the transfer of trademarks and operating rights and benefits, but must also stay as far as possible to deter and eliminate such risks. The registration institution must complete the registration application within 30 working days. If necessary, the corrective material will be completed within 60 days after receiving the correction notice and the registration institution must complete the correction within 30 working days after receiving the revised material, which meets the requirements.
