From your message, your immediate study plan seems to be 'book heavy': Unfortunately, many test buyers who study this way are getting 'stuck' at a particular score level. There's no harm in starting your studies in that fashion, but you'll likely end up needing to invest in some extra, non-book resources at some point. Since it seems like you're just starting your studies, it would be a good idea to take a full length practice CAT test; You can take 2 for free on www.mba.com (and they come with some extra practice content). If you want to study a little earlier, so you can familiarize yourself with basic content and question types, that's fine – but you shouldn't wait too long to take that initial cat. This score will give us a good sense of our natural strengths and weaknesses and will help provide a basis for comparison as you continue studying. It takes about 3.5 hours to complete a full cat, so make sure you've set enough time to take it while sitting. Once you have those scores, you should report back here and we can come up with a study plan. I want to know a little more about my timeline and goals: 1) What is your goal score? 2) When are you planning to take GMAT?3) When are you planning to apply to business school? GMAT killers are not born, they are made, the Rich _series includes ten books: GMAT Roadmap, Fraction, Decimal, and Percents GMAT Strategy Guide, Algebra GMAT Strategy Guide, Word Proms GMAT Strategy Guide, Geometry GMAT Strategy Guide, Number Properties GMAT Strategy Guide, Critical Reasoning GMAT Strategy Guide, Reading Perception GMAT Strategy Guide, Sentence Correction GMAT Strategy Guide , Integrated Reasoning and Essay GMAT Strategy Guide.
