encourages teachers to inearm academics and art, and to exploit students' artistic abilities to make academics more accessible. Students read Shakespeare in English class and perform drama scenes. A math teacher gives a lecture on wavelengths and ranges and frequency. A science teacher makes a connection between radioactive dezzly and rhythms that dancers dancers Students who enter with engineering prepare scenes and sets for the school game. While seniors at many New York city schools have a very light course load. Talent Unlimited encourages students to take four years of math and four years of science, about a third of them do. The school offers several Advanced Placement courses. Manager Yeou Jey Vasconcelos replaced retired manager Linda Hamil in 2016. Vasconcelos is a powerful communicator who sends emails and letters every two months, according to Lois Vigilante, secretary of the parent-teacher association. In recent years, communication and strong family-community ties have received lower grades than otherwise strong school surveys. Vasconcelos is a pianist who previously held the music department of Eleanor Roosevelt and taught all the instruments there. He studied science before moving on to performing arts and training. Vigilante said the manager has a strong persona, is organized, can address problems, is looking for solutions. (During this assignment there were no school surveys of teachers and students regarding his leadership.) COLLEGE ADMISSIONS: Several students won POSSE scholarships at the University of Southern California and Wheaton College in Massachusetts. A dance student was accepted to Juilliard. ADMISSION: Students can apply for dance, drama, sound, instrumental or musical theatre auditions. Applicants should score 2-4 on standard exams and have an average of 80 or higher in academic classes. Weekly tours are available from September to December.
