Although many styles are available, wooden mission-style frames are usually purchased for sturdy frame and simple design. This type of bunk bed is not difficult to assemble, but having an assistant can make the assembly faster 1. Most manufacturers provide you with everything you will need to assemble your bunk bed, including bolts, slats and rails 1. Mattresses are usually not included, but the retailer can recommend the right sizes when you buy your bed. Insert barrel nuts supplied with your bunk bed into the mounting holes at both ends of each side rail. You should have a total of four rails and 16 barrel nuts, which are small rolls. Some bunk beds already have these in holes, so if you didn't get barrel nuts with your bunk bed check the holes in the rails. Place the headboard on a wall and connect the side rails by inserting two of the bolts supplied through the headboard and into the rails on each side. Tighten the bolts with an Allen key. Connect the other end of the rails to the footboard by inserting two bolts through the holes on either side of the footboard and on the rail, and tightening with the Allen key. Align the central support onto the full bed frame so that the mounting holes align with those in the center of the headboard and footboard. Insert the screws supplied with your bunk bed and tighten with an Allen 1 key. Place the assembled full bed frame in the position you have chosen for the bed, orienting the headboard and footboard appropriately. Align the two side rails so that the holes at the end align with the holes in the double headboard. Insert two bolts through the double headboard and on the rails, and tighten. Insert two bolts through the foot board and on the rails at the opposite end, and tighten. Install guard rails on both sides of the twin bed if these are provided with your bunk bed. Usually the rail will have grooves that fit over the side rail and these are screwed into place. Secure the rail with screw screws Install slat kits provided with your bunk bed onto assembled twins and full frames, and secure each with wood screws supplied. In most wooden frame bunks, you will find pre-drilled holes at either end of the rails and in the center for screws, which are needed to secure slats. Locate the fastening holes above the full bed headboard and footboard. Insert the metal pins provided with your bed into these holes. Lift the double bed over the full bed and align the pins with the holes in the bottom of the headboard and footboard legs. Slide the double bed over the pins and make sure it is pushed down completely over the pins on both sides at each end. Ensure that all bolts are tight so that the bunk bed frame does not move or swing, and install layers. The twin layer should rest at least 5 inches below the edge of the guard rail to prevent the fall. Use the manufacturer recommended size of mattress for your bunk bed. Check the bunk bed periodically to ensure that the ingredients have not come loose. Tighten the bolts as needed. All assembly training documents are listed below, items are grouped by collection.
