Movie theaters explain why movies look and sound so real as you inialiate that giant tub of buttered popcorn and mint JuJu bean box to the local multiplex. Advertising Advertising Advertising Photos: ShutterstockTime, space, people, place. As companies open up and events start happening again, I keep thinking about these factors. Spending a lot of time in an e-space with many other people is not where I want to be on the COVID-19 risk spectrum. And that means no cinema, for me, for a long time. But some theaters are opening. As well as many other things that are quite high in the spectrum of risks: some churches are starting to have in-person services again. The President held a rally. Restaurants in many areas are open to indoor dining. As the rules relax, we have to ask ourselves some strange questions: is it safe to see a friend? Go to Read More I don't care about all this, personally, as a customer. But I am also concerned about the workers in these places, because they are subject to all our germs. As a customer, you may decide that you will eat again from time to time, as a gift. As a server, you can't decide to work occasionally. So, because we see more opportunities to leave the house, we need to carefully assess these risks, because other people - companies, governments - don't necessarily act with our best interests at heart. Just because something's open doesn't mean it's safe. G/O Media could get a commission Cinemas are trying to keep their security measures thin, the Washington Post reports, because they fear that people won't feel comfortable at all if they are constantly reminded of how risky a movie theater can be. Well, maybe that's the way it should be. Companies are reopening in many areas, and it's totally understandable if you feel tempted to... I might consider, one day, a short trip to the gym at off-peak hours for some socially distant squats. I wouldn't get on a plane anytime soon and I definitely won't sit in a movie theater for two hours. What about you? The smell of popcorn, undulating laughter, and suscious surprise from a crowd: cinemas have the unparalleled ability to enchant and offer an escape for a few hours. Recently endangered by an army of video streaming services, cinema remains a coveted pastime for cinephiles. And while cinemas may not be on most travelers' must-have lists when you in a new place, there are exceptions. These theaters offer an overall experience worth traveling for, whether it's old-world opulence or new-era comfort and service. From one of the oldest operating places in the country to a theater that makes its own beer, go here more than just a night at the movies. August 14, 2017Donna Teatro El CapitanO offers the opportunity to revisit classic films on the big screen on a daily basis, the Castro Theater excels at combining its historical excavations with antiquated treasures of film history. Built in 1922 in the heart of San Francisco's Castro District, the grand cinema blends influences from Spanish, Asian, and Italian designs and houses over 1,400 seats. There's definitely something else 2000 at sci-fi Dine-In Theatre Restaurant at Walt Disney World's Hollywood Studios, and it's not just the science fiction movie. This magical feeling comes through a total immersive recreation of a 1950s drive-in cinema, complete with custom car cabs that serve as a table for your meal. The short clips of strangely pierced sci-garde classics fade into the background as the real special effect becomes the meaning of time travel. Hollywood's Golden Age is carved into the sacred walls of the El Capitan Theatre, a legendary Los Angeles movie house that gave life a dazzling new lease through Walt Disney Studios Motion Pictures. Built by visionary Charles E. Toberman in 1926, the 1,100-seat theater now exclusively showcases Disney movies, with a rotating reel of new releases, mouse house classics, and previews. An advantage for every ticket in the film comes via pre-show live entertainment (often themed for feature film presentation), capturing wonder for all ages in Disney style. One of the oldest operating theatres in the country, Thalian Hall dates back to 1858. A landmark with a touch to drama, its design is a cross of classic revival and late Victorian architecture with a perfect tetrastyle façade. It's a performing arts center in the center, so plan ahead to capture an independent film on the main stage or opt for one of the film festivals that frequent the theater throughout the year. Giving new meaning to the old-school phrase, the Kennedy School in Portland, Oregon, is a hotel, brewery, and movie theater set in a former public elementary school. Built in 1915 and re-proposed as a current iteration in 1997, the highlight of the space is its luxurious and relaxed cinema, where seats are boom chairs and vintage sofas. What was once a space used for school assemblies now lives as a venue for second-run movies and classics. Moving from the heights of a large circus greater than the size of a proscenium, Albert Ringling tried to replicate France's ornate opera houses as a gift to his small hometown of Baraboo, Wisconsin. Built in 1915, the theater has survived decades considerable restructuring efforts have made use of the interiors of the masterpiece. Arrive early to admire the opulent columns, pit seats, and chandelier. Classical films are performed interchangely as part of the theatre's normal artistic programming. Kryptonite at every mass market Film, Film Forum has been a national leader in presenting counter-culture cinema since its lo-fi beginnings in 1970. (Some relocations brought Film Forum to his current home on New York's Houston Street in 1989.) As the only nonprofit movie theater in New York City, movie goers look for the intimate spot for its three screens that are curated for exclusive previews and second-look on faded classics. A cultural pillar in Boston's Brookline neighborhood since 1933, Coolidge Corner has the rare distinction of being a continuously operational theater dedicated to independent cinema. Its well-preserved Art Deco style, along with a classic red curtain, prepares the scene for movies you won't find at the Megaplex. Run as a non-profit organization since 1989, the theater has undergone several renovations over the past decade, bringing the operation back to its historic glory by adding comfortable seats, HD projectors, and new sound systems. Create cocktails and avocado toast delivered to your seat midway through the movie: the new wave of luxury movies can be traced back to one of alamo drafthouse's outposts, Alamo Drafthouse at the Ritz. Founded in 1997 as a second-series cinema, Alamo Drafthouse has created a new cinematic experience by swapping hot dogs and soft drinks for craft food and craft beers. The operation has found widespread success, rapidly expanding to 29 locations across the country. Alamo moved its initial headquarters from the confines of a garage to Austin's historic Ritz Theatre in 2007.Explore the Beauty Pageant movie Photo: @sallytamarkin/Instagram We're five months away from the coronavirus pandemic and things are getting pretty terrible. Summer, in some ways, is almost over, and many of the sources we normally turn to for comfort and pleasure in difficult times are not available to us. Central to each other: cinema. On a warm August afternoon, there are few better rerieves than sitting in a dark, frosty theater to watch a blockbuster too loud and low-budget as you eat candy and drink a bucket of diet Coca-Cola. But for now — and for the foreseeable future — cinemas are closed. Fortunately, there is an alternative. Last month, writer T Kira Madden (author of the memoir Long Live the Tribe of Fatherless Girls) tweeted that his wife, Hannah, had surprised her on her birthday with a meticulously re-created cinematic experience, complete with usher dress, snack menus, and mandatory pre-roll for students. As servers do at the Nitehawk in Brooklyn (their favorite theater before quarantine) and the Alamo Drafthouse, Hannah even took T Kira's order in the dark, crouching on her seat. omfgb$.:37!::d bdhdk Hannah's birthday surprised me after with a cinematic experience and is even making me watch student film reels Olivia Wilde 🍷🍷🍷🍷🍷🍷🍷🍷❤️ pic.twitter.com/8bf7sQ3GX- T Kira Kira Mr. President, @tkiramadden) July 21, 2020 For the film, Hannah chose Hulu's Palm Springs — because, Madden told me, a real cinematic experience involves seeing something new and potentially mediocre rather than an old fave. Madden's Twitter followers responded with crying emojis and praise for his wife's attention to detail, and Madden says their stupid home theater helps fill an open gap from shutting down COVID-19. Before the pandemic, Madden says, he spent as much time as possible in movie theaters. My friend Sally Tamarkin, editor-in-chief of SELF magazine, also created a film experience for his wife, Andrea, not so long ago. (As a lesbian, I wonder: is it a lesbian thing?) For Sally, the gesture was more to live their home life than cinemas in particular. (Romantic overachievers, they also did pop-ups of coffee shops and hotel-bars for each other.) We needed SOMETHing to confuse him, Sally told me. So I went online and downloaded models for tickets and menus that had nice designs and made tickets to 'Quarfest 2020.' Sally also offered a menu of snack options and played a cinematic curiosity and a commercial coca-commercial pre-roll that she found on YouTube. As Andrea watched the ads, Sally made the nachos and margaritas she had ordered. The pre-show vibe was by far [Andrea's] favorite part of the whole experience, he says. As an additional bonus, Sally let Andrea choose the film; normally, their film selection process involves more compromises. (Andrea chose Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels.) The best part about re-created cinema, Says Sally, is that it also provides a purpose for the planner. Preparing gives you something to do, so the only advantage is not only enjoying the finished product, but also thinking about the things to do for it and performing them, he says. ANY news, even two hours of novelty, seems incredible during the quar. My wife and I aren't that big with props, but last Sunday we threw our 55-inch smart TV on the patio of my mother-in-law's house, where we currently live. Lydia had spent the afternoon cleaning her mother's long-unused grill, and we wanted to put it into use. So, while grilling burgers, we drank Bud Light Limes and watched Underworld, the 2003 vampire werewolf, horror-action hybrid with Kate Beckinsale. The film was ugly and, despite the lemongrass candles, the mosquitoes were out in full force. In this regard, it was no different to be in a drive-in movie. The most important thing is that it was something different. We're going to do it every Sunday. This is the romantic gesture of quarantine
