Instead of unearthing the old T-shirts you've worn over the past six summers (you know, free software with faded graphics and colored armpits) why not invest in a few new ones? I'm a big fan of a classic white or solid colored v-neck, but here are a few suggestions if you want a more graphical approach... 1. Choose a cause: Whether it's your support for Humanitarian Society, vegetarian rights, or Japanese Relief, a T-shirt can show what's important to you and encourage others to follow your lead. 2. Reveal something: If you don't want to broadcast your favorite charities, think about other areas of interest. Maybe it's a classical or artistic rock band locality you admire, or a record store or pub that you frequent. You may be surprised how your tee jacket can suddenly become a topic of conversation. Another way to get Upgrade your style with spring stones. 3. But Don't Reveal Too Much: You might want to re-think a shirt that showcases frat-boy potty humor, a dicey political link, admiration of Charlie Sheen, or conspiracy theory rants. My rule is not to wear anything you wouldn't want a colleague or your grandmother to see you in, because you're going to run into someone unexpectedly the moment you put on a problematic shirt. 4. Make sure it fits: Don't buy a big one out of habit if your true size is more than one medium. Guys make this mistake all the time and finish swimming in their shirts. If the shoulder seam starts below your actual shoulder, if the sleeves extend to your elbows, or if the body falls below your hips, the shirt is too big. Bottom line: Make sure it fits your body. Finish the look with the ultimate custom jeans. This content is created and maintained by a third party, and imported into this page to help users provide their email address. F/Photodisc/Getty Images For certain schools, it is important for students to wear a school uniform to maintain order among them. School uniforms are common in religious and private schools, and some public schools require them. Attendance and academic success According to a 2005 study, researchers found that an Ohio school that recently implemented a unified policy saw an increase in attendance as well as in the total number of graduates for the 2005 school year. There have also been fewer suspensions in schools that require students to wear uniforms or comply with a strict dress code. The general belief is that since all students are wearing uniforms, there are few distractions in the class of students worried about what they and others are wearing. School uniforms also help promote mental and spiritual learning because students are wearing their school colors together. They look more unified, thereby creating a sense of community and cohesion while reducing the sense of competition. Efficiency and cost Students in uniform to school spend less time preparing in the morning than non-uniformed students. They don't need to take the time to think about what to wear or have to try on some different outfits. This allows some students to sleep more because they can wake up later in the morning knowing that they don't have to spend a lot of time getting dressed. They are also more likely to have time to eat a nutritious breakfast before school, giving them the energy they need to focus more in the classroom. School uniforms can also reduce the cost of clothing for parents. Students attending school without a uniform policy may more interested in dressing in fashionable or expensive clothes. Parents of students attending a school with a uniform policy spend less than $150 on each year, as stated by the National Retail Federation. Uniform bullying and school violence eliminate bullying due to the fact that everyone wears the same clothes and children cannot be teased for wearing something unusual or different. Uniforms can create an equal environment because students from different economies wear the same clothes, which can reduce the bullying of people who may not be able to afford fashionable or expensive clothes. School uniforms allow school intruders to be easily identified, which is extremely important in a world of school shootings. Similarly, if a student is abducted or leaves school at an unauthorized time, they are easily identified with the authorities if they wear a student uniform. Debate against school uniforms Some argue against students having to wear uniforms because it contradicts their right to self-expression. They believe that students will be able to express their personality and creativity by dressing the way they want. Some parents also feel that paying for uniforms conflicts with their right to send their children to a free public school. They feel that uniforms impose an extra cost that they do not need to bear to provide their children with a free education. They argue that student uniforms actually create a greater goal for bullying, as students from other schools easily point out students wear uniforms. Some students may also feel resentment towards their school for making them wear uniforms, which can cause behavioral problems that often do not exist in schools where uniforms are not required. In the past week or so, among the Black Lives Matter protests, there has been an unfortunate revival of boogaloos on our radar. The Boogaloo bois movement is a predominantly white, heavily armed group who claim they have liberal ideals, and have shown protests against police violence in recent weeks armed with teeth and seeking to start a race war. In the past month, at least seven men linked to the boogaloo movement have been arrested for possession of weapons and conspiracy to commit violent attacks. Three people have been arrested in Las Vegas after plotting to terror attack protesters and attack other targets, including an electrical substation. A man has been charged in the fatal shooting of a federal officer in Oakland during a George Floyd rally. But there's one thing you might notice about these men: many of them appeared in protests wearing Hawaiian shirts. Why aloha shirt like a uniform? Apparently the reason stems from an inside joke about the little-known 1984 film Breakin' 2: Electric Boogaloo. It's a racist joke, a reference to an adaptation of the word boogaloo, according to the Southern Poverty Law Center. The boogaloo meme itself emerged simultaneously in anti-government and white power space online in the beginning SPLC said. In both of these communities, 'boogaloo' is often associated with racist violence and, in many cases, is a clear call for racial warfare. Today, the term is regularly deployed by white nationalists and neo-Nazis who want to see society plunged into chaos so that they can come to power and build a new fascist state. But the origins of even hawaiian aloha shirts are contradictory. Gregory Pōmaika'i Gushiken at Color Bloq writes: In contrast to the popular story, the aloha shirt does not find its roots in indigenous craftsmanism and is associated with violent multiculturalism and militaryization in the Hawaiian Islands Gregory Pōmaika'i Gushiken writes at Color Bloq. Originally, the aloha shirts were created to quell the racist an out fears of American citizens, who feared that Hawai'i would combine a largely non-white population into the American empire... In other words, the ability of Americans to wear heaven has literally re-made a story that Hawai'i is theirs to grab. Native Hawaiians have finally regained style, with native Hawaiian designers such as Manaola Yap and socially and politically conscious brands such as Hawaiian Forces designing aloha shirts that give an important image to indigenous communities. The fact that Boogaloos is trying to start a race war after naming himself after a racist meme while wearing a shirt is rooted in violent realism and tries to wash hawai'i's whitewash as racism piles up when racism piles up when racist. The shirts can be combined with comfortable, quirky people in much of America, but there's nothing cute about Boogaloo bois. Bois.
