The National Committee on Democratic Training (NDTC) is a 527 political action committee that trains Democratic candidates to stand for election. [1] To this end, the NDTC provides candidates with online finance, field management and management services, communication and communication, and funds campaign training. [2] It also offers free online courses and training for Democratic candidates interested in running for local office. The NDTC background was founded by Kelly Dietrich in 2016. [3] Dietrich, a Democratic Party campaign operative, consulted U.S. Representative Cheri Bustos (D-Illinois), who founded a one-day training seminar for Build the Bench candidates since he founded the NDTC. [4] The NDTC was designed as an online training platform for Democratic candidates interested in running for office. According to their own data, more than 10,000 Democratic candidates applied for online training from the National Democratic Training Committee. [5] The National Democratic Training Committee works with the Democratic Party and left-center groups such as the American Federation of State and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) government workers' union; [6] ActBlue, a left-wing charity service; [7] Emerging America, a PAC that employs candidates for the Democratic Party; [8] Campaign Committee on Progressive Change; Communications Workers of America (CWA); and other organizations to the left of the center. The NDTC's political activity has provided candidates with training in a number of local elections. Some not important candidates for the NDTC are Shelly Hutchinson, a candidate for the state 107, Tom Tull, the Nominee for the West Virginia House of Delegates in District 38; [10] Amelia Candidate for Representative of the State of Montana in District 52; [11] and David Williams, candidate for Oklahoma State Representative in District 95. [12] All of these candidates went through the online training offered by the NDTC and are officially partnered with the organization. In 2016, the NDTC relied on donations from 183 individuals, who together received about $851,400. In 2018, the NDTC received donations from 725 individuals and various 501(c)(5) organizations. The most noteworthy contribution received by the NDTC was received by the American Federation of State and Municipal Employees (AFSCME). AFSCME, the largest union for inauthentic government workers, gave $50,000 to the NDTC in both 2017 and 2018. [13] In the 2016 election cycle, the NDTC spent a total of $851,400. The NDTC spent about $62,000 on charitable events, using about $29,000 to fund the funding. She also spent $26,200 on administrative activities. [14] In the 2018 election cycle, the NDTC increased its expenditure to about $4.1 million. This year, the PAC spent $1.5 million on charitable activities, including $1.3 million on funding consultancy services. The NDTC also spent about $814,000 on salaries, salaries and benefits during the 2018 election cycle. [15] The NDTC provided various vendors in the 2016 and 2018 election cycles. In 2016, the best sellers and recipients included several different organizations. The best sellers were Mothership Strategies, which received about $117,585; ActBlue, which received about $33,600; And two left-wing magazines: The Nation, which receives about $12,500, and Mother Jones, who receives $10,000. [16] In 2018, mothership strategies were included among the most popular NDTC recipients, receiving about $1.5 million from the NDTC; payroll processor Paychex, receives approximately $297,000; ActBlue, $157,000; and The Nation, which received $74,000. That's $74,000. [17]
