Sometimes, when you apply for a visa to visit Canada, we ask you to give us an invitation letter from someone in Canada. An invitation letter does not guarantee that we will be given a visa. The Visa Officer assessed you to decide whether to meet Canada's immigration law requirements. The information for the person writing invitation letter writes an invitation letter does not mean you are legally responsible for the visitor once he or she gets To Canada. You should always write the letter in good faith. You must tell the truth and plan to keep the promise you make in the letter. Send your letter (notaries, if the visa office asks for this) to the person you're inviting to Canada. The person must send this letter to the Canadian Embassy or consult outside Canada when applying for a temporary resident visa. You must include this information about the person you are inviting: full name, birth date, address and phone number, your relationship with the person, the purpose of the trip, how long the person plans to stay in Canada, where the person will stay, and how it will pay for things, and when the person plans to leave Canada. You must include this information about yourself: full name, birth date, address and telephone number in Canada, job title, whether you are a Canadian citizen or permanent resident, a photocopy of a document proving your status in Canada, including a Canadian birth certification, if you were born in Canada, a Canadian citizenship card, if you are a naturalized citizen, or a copy of your PR card or proof of your IMM 1000 landing, if you are a permanent resident, family details, such as the name and date of your spouse's birth and dependents (this is mandatory for the parent and super visa grandparents), and the total number of people living in the home, including those you sponsor whose sponsorship is still wanting (this is mandatory for the visa and super grandparents). For the parent and super visa grandparents only, you must also provide: a promise written and signed up for your financial support for your parents or grandparents for all stays in Canada, and proof of your income is satisfied or is above the low-cut income (LICO) for the total number of people, including visiting parents or grandparents. This information is only a guide. You must write the invitation letter by yourself. Some Office visas may require a public notarizing your letter. For inquiries, contact us. Modified date: 2013-09-27 Get a Temporary Canada Visa meaning that you will visit Canada for a short period of time, usually 6 months or less. The visit can be for different reasons such as for tourists, visiting friends or family, for business and so on. In some cases, the Canadian Embassy applying will ask an invitation letter to Canada from someone you know. This article will go through the details of what an invitation letter for visas is, how to get it, as well as sample invitation letters in Canada which you can use. What is an invitation letter? An invitation letter to a visitor's visa in Canada is a simple letter signed from someone you know well in Canada invites you to the country. This person may be your friend, family, or business partner, but it must be someone with a close relationship with and who can verify your identity and goals to visit Canada. The invitation letter is basically a prayer from this person in Canada asking the Canadian Consul to give you a visa and allow you to enter the country. It also serves as a sort of warranty from the person inviting you to the Consul that you do not provide false information about your intention to enter Canada, that you will leave Canada and not overstay your visa, as well as may support you financially if you can't. This invitation letter will serve as further proof of why the Canadian Consulter should give you a visa to go to Canada. It is an addition to the rest of the application and it can enforce your case if it meets the requirements. Did you know? Unconvincing and wrongly writing invitation letters accounts for 60% of visa applications who can write an Invitation Letter to Canadian Visa? As mentioned, an invitation letter for visas can be written by anyone you know well. It can be a close family member as a parent, sister, husband, wife, child, and so on, a friend or business partner if you are visiting Canada for business. The important requirement in any case is that the person sending the invitation letter is a permanent resident or a citizen of Canada. The person invites you cannot be an illegal immigrant or does not have legal status in Canada. They must have a good standing status as well as a job and tide of income increase the likelihood that the letters will have a positive impact on the decision of the Canadian Consul to give you the visa. What are the Requirements for Invitation Letter for Canada? The Invitation Letter for Visa Canada must meet some requirements in terms of information that it should have. The person writing the letter must include all the details below or it is a risk that the Canadian Consul will not accept the letter and even worse, it may end up injuring your chances of obtaining the Canadian visa. There are three sets of conditions: The information of the visa applicant; Information of the person invites the applicant; Specific information for the Super Visa. The information in the invitation letter applicant must include the following information about the visa applicant: the full name (name and last name); Date Contact Info (phone number and email); Exact address; The relationship that the applicant has with the invite; The purpose of the visit to Canada; The duration of the visit; Where will the applicant be living in Canada and how they will pay for their stay; The date when the person will arrive in Canada and the date they will leave; Information the person invited to invite canada invitation letter must have this information about the applicant's invite to Canada: The full name (last name and last name); Date of birth; Contact Info (phone number and email); Exact address in Canada; Status in Canada (Canadian permanent resident or U.S. citizen) via providing a copy of their status as: Canadian citizenship or passport if the person is a citizen; Canadian birth certpian if the person was born in Canada; Copy the Permanent Resident Card or IMM 1000 (Proof of Landing Documents), if they are a permanent resident; The job title; Name and date of birth of family member and dependent (spouse or common law partner); The total number of people living in the home, including those who have been sponsored or who have sponsorship is still in effect). Specific information for the Super Visa Super Visa is a visa for parents and grandparents to visit their children or grandchildren for longer than 6 months. Because this visa is valid for longer than other Temporary Resident Visas, more information in the letter is required besides the one mentioned above. Thus, for children and grandchildren to invite parents or grandparents to Canada, they must also include the following: A written and signed statement that you will sign financially supporting your parents or grandparents for all their stays in Canada; Proof that you have enough income for the total number of people living in the home, such as for parents to visit or their grandparents.
