Whether you're a seasoned PowerSeller or a keen self-starter, selling on eBay can be captured if at a moment Pursuit. Making profits are rarely made overnight, and pays new sellers to do their homework before jumping in. A lot has changed on eBay in 2008. If you want names just a few, the arrival of the best match feature and changes in Buy It Now formats and feedback. And they all forced even the most erudite vendors to revisit the drawing board. Here are 14 tips vendors of all levels should (re)consider before pressing the relist button.1. Get to grips with Best MatchBecause Best Matches September 2008 has presented both new opportunities and challenges for many sellers and has already filtered out from the lazy. Instead of the default search view, which is sorted by items that end as soon as possible, it's now recent sales, title keywords, item details, price, feedback, detailed salesperson estimates, and a number of other secret sauce factors that help determine where your lists will appear in the mix. If you are serious about earning money on eBay, it pays to know how it works.2. Understanding the changes to Buy It Now and ShopsNumber changes announced by eBay in 2008 include fixed price lists, which are usually cheaper to list, which last much longer (if you so wish) and all formats that are now included in the main search results. Thus, it is now cost-effective for sellers to list their entire stock or stock with only one listing per product. Once you've accumulated some sales, increase the amount of units available, and whether the list is active or re-listed to maintain all important recent sales popularity. Read more.3. Detailed salesman what? Detailed vendor ratings (DSRs) are now as important as feedback, but the line has been raised probably a touch too high for some sellers in certain categories. On average, if you receive more than 4.6 out of 5 stars over a 30-day period, you will be entitled to a discount on final costs and other benefits, but you can be fined if you collect consistently low ratings and bad feedback. More than ever, it's important to provide a service and communicate with customers. Keep an eye on the DSRs in the vendor control panel.4. Open eBay ShopTho you're selling for anything more than a little money pin, you probably already run an eBay store and save on the corners. eBay offers the tools you'll need to build, brand and customize a store without technical knowledge, but the templates are basic at the best of times, so invest time to customize the look and feel of your store with your own HTML. Be sure to set cross-promotion rules to draw attention to similar products, and create About Me to highlight what makes you unique.5. Using Sales Manager ProKeeping track sales is a stay in a smooth process, but if you sell in quantity and not some automation, your time could soon be eaten by administration. eBay's Excellent Sales Manager Pro can mitigate some of the Pain. Automating feedback and creating custom email templates will keep your customers up to date when you click the button, allowing you to easily archive sales and printing invoices, and evaluate your sales at a glance. There is no substitute for a polite phone call if you have a difficult or anxious customer. Just look at my phone bill.6. Informing customers Prevention is better than the drug when it comes to feedback, so friendly communication and instant and secure delivery will help you avoid criticism. But how do you communicate the importance of your detailed vendor ratings? Unfortunately, I think eBay doesn't succeed in this on your behalf, so it's worth spelling at your customers that 5 stars makes a difference. Add a note at the top of your sending and payments received emails highlighting the importance of such, and mention DSRs on the homepage of your store. Consider leaving feedback as soon as your customer has paid, too. Current page: Page 1 Next page Page 2 Each makes errors here and then. It is perfectly acceptable to make a mistake on eBay and make a transaction. The correct procedure for cancelling a transaction depends on the type of transaction and how far it has progressed. The answer to the question: Whether I can change my mind about the eBay sale depends. Below are some common scenarios on how to cancel an eBay sale, depending on the type of list and transaction rate. When the buyer bids at auction, technically, they take down the contract to pay the final price. Unfortunately, the buyer sometimes decides that he does not want to pay. They may have found another item after the bid, the auction may have been too much to say and over-insouth with the emotion of the auction, or they may have changed their minds. The buyer has some decisions here. First of all, they can't pay. However, this action could lead to an UPI or unpaid item. Too many of these cases are against the deal and are temporarily suspended from eBay permanently. The second choice is for the buyer to complete the delay of the offer. The buyer can easily cancel the offer if he changes his mind and essentially misses the auction. This is the preferred method in accordance with the terms of service of eBay. If the buyer changes their mind about selling eBay at the end of the auction, they can contact the seller and ask them to cancel the transaction. As long as the cancellation is at the customer's request, most sellers will comply accordingly. Salespeople cannot pressure the customer to pay if the customer no longer wants the item. The salesperson can offer another admable quote to another bid or re-list the item. The cancellation process is slightly different for fixed item prices. The seller has the option to put the immediate payment option on the list. If the item does not have an instant payment, you can use the salesperson to cancel at your request. If the item had an instant payment and you had already paid for it and the seller has not yet submitted it, you can send a message to the salesperson to cancel the transaction and PayPal. Most vendors will work with you on this issue. They do not want to deal with a refund, so it is in their interest to cancel the transaction. The buyer does not get any negative measures on his account, nor does the seller. However, the seller may be a bit irritated and block you, but there are no negative consequences other than that. If you sent the best quote to the seller and it was accepted, you will receive an invoice. If you decide that you do not want to buy the item, it is ultimately best to contact the salesperson and explain that you no longer want the item and cancel the transaction at the customer's request. Again, there are no negative consequences, except for the annoying seller. Remember, sellers sell items on eBay to make money. When transactions are canceled, it affects the seller's line. The seller can block you. One last scenario needs to be considered. If you change your mind about selling after shipping the item, it's best to contact the salesperson and explain that you've changed your mind. Once the package has arrived, mark it with a return to sender, and the package will be redirected back to the seller. Tracking will appear when it is delivered. The salesperson can refund the cost of the item, but not send it, as you changed your mind after shipping. You can also open a refund request. But you'll have to pay for the return shipment. Using the return method, the package remains unsuppressed and the seller will receive it back exactly as they submitted it. Whenever you communicate with your trading partner on eBay, always use the eBay messaging system. All messages are archived there. If eBay needs to step in to help resolve the dispute or answer a question, all correspondence is visible to them. Keep communication on eBay so that everything between you and the seller is documented. Documented.
