Among the most varied and versatile inventions, fans come in many shapes and sizes. They are found in both commercial are produced under numerous brand names. Certain types of fans serve a very specific purpose, while others are more all-comprehensive in their atservability. Whether inside or out, for commercial or residential use, fans offer cool breezes, ventilate enclosed areas and draw warm, stale air, air irritants and moisture from spaces. Depending on its type, a fan can also serve an aesthetic purpose as well, especially in stylish ceiling fans and portable home units. Dozens of brand names produce fans of all kinds, so it's a great place to start when you start your search for the real fan. Many of the following brand names produce fans of different types, so expect to see many of the manufacturers repeat. Fans can be divided into 5 basic types: kitchen/bathroom fans, ceiling fans, portable, exhaust/ventilation and wall fans. Kitchen/bathroom fans used for exhaust purposes were made by BROAN, NuTone, Panasonic, FanTech and Air King. Some of the manufacturers also make attic exhaust fans. Ceiling fans have dozens of producers. Some of the most famous include pedestrian, flooring, tower and table units. Numerous brands offer portable fans including Hunter, Lasko, FlowPro, Aloha, Air King, Dayton, Schaefer, Holmes, Honeywell, Deco Breeze and Windchaser. Wall-mounted fans look like floor and pedestrian fans, but on a wall with a bracket. They were made by Gettington, TPI, Global Industrial and Universal Lighting, just to name a few. Finally, commercial fan makers include Quorum, FlowPro, Air King, Airmaster, Ventamatic, Westinghouse, GE, TPI and Global Industrial with the last one of the largest producers of commercial fan products. garages and other large commercial buildings require fixed wall exhaust fans. Commercial exhaust fans are driven directly or with a fan belt and have blades as long as 4 feet in diameter. They are available with and without shutters or diapers and install in exterior walls. For many large commercial spaces, large fans are used in a steel box housing. Ventilation fans can either be fixed or portable and are required to create a with fresh, cool air. They are especially important when working in enclosed spaces where oxygen can rapidly deplete such as manholes and tanks. Commercial Cooling is generally more powerful than home units and comes in pedestrian, flooring and wall-mounted varieties. Home FansFans used in-house consist of ceiling fans, portable fans and exhaust/ventilation fans. Just like in commercial spaces, home fans offer cool breezes, exhaust stale, hot air and moisture and pull warm air up and out of a room. Home fans are purely for utility, so decorations and frills aren't needed. Ceiling fans are among the most decorative of home fans, available in numerous styles from the ultra modern to the classically elegant. Ceiling FansAvailable in both indoor and indoor outdoor units, ceiling fans become part of a room's décor, and in many cases they can greatly improve a room's aesthetic appeal. Configured with 2 to 5 blades, available with and without light, ceiling fans can be visually beautiful fittings, whether they possess a futuristic sleekness and simplicity or an ancient ornate design with extravagant inlays and hardware. Fan blades can be constructed of wood, polished or brushed metal or even natural fibers such as bamboo or woven rattan. Accessories include optional blades, remote control and light fixtures. Reversible ceiling fans are meant to provide a cool breeze wherever you place them. Pedestrian fans are clear because they sit on a long, adjustable stand and generate breezes more at eye level. Floor fans include cheap box fans as well as those mounted to simple metal shelves. Table fans are slim, vertically-built units that usually have some small impellers contained in the housing. They often look like tall, narrow speakers. Portable fans usually have an oscillator allows the fan to cool a wider area of a room. Portable fans of all types are available in indoor/outdoor models. Outside fans have a more rugged construction with rust-free finishes. Outside fans should have a U.L. wet or damp rating. Finally, exhaust fans are needed fittings in bathrooms and kitchens would quickly overheat. Exhaust fans are needed fittings in bathrooms would get and stay very damp if not for outlet fans, and kitchens would quickly overheat. Exhaust fans are either wall or ceiling-mounted, ceiling-mounted, ceiling-mounted, directly or through a tube and is controlled by either a wired switch or pull chain. Bathroom and kitchen exhaust fans are rated according to the number of cubic feet of air per minute they can pull out, so the size of the fan you need will correlate directly with the size of the bathroom or kitchen. Fans perform a very wide range of features and are needed in homes as well as in commercial workplaces. Whether lowering the temperature with a cool breeze, ventilation heat, moisture or smoke or circulating air while serving as a decorative element in a room, fans help maintain a cool, clean atmosphere.
