Pain.What's next to the pain? Nothing.OMG! Peer-e-Kamil is my most favorite book and the first Umaira Ahmed I read, following his other books. Salar was an obnoxious guy I hated the most. He gradually turned into a good guy and the story of his transformation and self-realization is what Peer-e-Kamil is about. Many people criticize about Salar's IQ level and why he is shown as an extraordinary guy. Please guys, when it comes to inspirational model as a modest man, we always example the best. It's the book that changed my view of life. The book that made me realize where I am in the lives of others. That it's never about how pretty you are, how rich you are or how genius you are. As soon as you disappear into the shadows, people forget you. The only thing that matters is how good you are as a person, as a human being. How compassionate you are towards these others. How you can inspire and positively change the lives of others. How you can show them the right way. How you can be guiding light when they are blinded by negativity and arrogance. I recommend to all Urdu readers to read this book. 2. Sana Peer-e-Kamil was my second Urdu novel and the first by Umaira Ahmed. Being one of the most popular Urdu novels ever written, Peer-e-Kamil is a journey from extreme to extreme. And that's justified. Yes, it becomes a little amazing to reflect on the changes in Salaar, the protagonist, but we know all the reasons. That's the beauty of it. Against the backdrop of Islamabad, America, Paris and Lahore; Peer-e-Kamil tells the story of a boy blinded by his own doubts about life. It is his journey into a man who is quite opposed to the boy he was. At first, Umaima's subtly persuasive personality irritates and amuses Salaar. But over time, he doesn't understand his obsession with her. All he did was spend a few hours with Umaima, but those few hours and the words that were exchanged between them haunted him. They come into his mind when he least expects them to, which makes him question his way of life. In the end, his thoughts force Salaar head first into depression and he finds nothing of the trouble to live He tries to pray, but fails miserably. Being one student, he has always been so far stubborn in the sense of superiority that he is never unable to decipher the meaning of iratum Mustaqe or the right path. He does not know what is the right path and why he is for lost humans. And of all the people he's ever met in life, he hates the one who claims to be religious. These people are the worst because for him, they exaggerate everything about themselves to the handle. Time passes and Salaar finds himself changing. Its transformation is complete during the last hours of the night when it is attached to a tree wearing only its Bermuda shorts. There, he really understands the following levels of ecstasy, the thing that has always eluded him. This scene reminded me of a somewhat similar scene from Brida by Paulo Coelho. Peer-e-Kamil is following the path of justice. It is about discouraging faith in the face of all life's difficulties. It teaches a profound lesson on how to live and how our lives will reach a significant stage. It is about finding ourselves through our Creator. Peer-e-Kamil is about the search for life itself.
