because he wanted a name that would ward off listeners. According to Durst, the name is there to turn people's heads away. A lot of people we don't even want to listen to our music. [4] Other names considered by Durst include Gimp Disco, Split Dickslit, Bitch Piglet and Blood Fart. [5] Every record label that showed an interest in the band pressured its members to change its name. [4] Limp Bizkit developed a cult following in the underground music scene, particularly at Milk Bar, an underground punk club in Jacksonville. The local popularity of the band was such that Sugar Ray, who had a great label contract, opened for a thenunsigned Limp Bizkit at Velocity with hip hop group Funkdoobiest. [4] Milkbar owner, banny Wimmer, stated that Limp Bizkit had the biggest draw for a local band. He went to record stores and took people, he was in contact with high schools. [4] However, the band knew that in order to achieve national success, they would have to stand out in their live performances. [4] Attracting crowds through word of mouth, the band gave energetic live performances, featuring George Michael's Faith and Paula Abdul's Straight Up, and featuring Borland in bizarre costumes. [4] Borland's theatrical rock style was the main attraction for many concertgoers. Durst tried in vain to attract the attention of A& R representatives to various labels by pretending to be the band's manager. [4] Later, when Korn was performing in town as an opening act for All The Sick, Durst invited Korn to drink beer and tattoo them. Although Durst's tattoos were impressive, he was able to convince Reginald Fieldy Arvizu to listen to a demo consisting of the songs Pollution, Counterfeit and Impasse. Korn added a then-unsigned Limp Bizkit to two tours, which exposed the band to a new audience. [4] [6] The band tried to express their sound by auditioning an additional guitarist, but Borland soon determined that another guitarist was not the answer, and DJ Lethal, formerly of the hip hop group House of Pain, Pain, the band as a turntablist after a successful practice performance. Joining the band gave Lethal a chance to experiment with his turntable technique in a way that hip hop hadn't allowed him to do, helping shape the band's style. Due to creative differences, Borland left the band at this time. [4] Three Dollar Bill, Yall (1997-1998) Following the release of Three Dollar Bill, Yall, singer Fred Durst was appointed Senior Vice President of A& R at Interscope. After their performance opening for Korn at the Dragonfly in Hollywood was well received, Limp Bizkit signed with Mojo, a subsidiary of MCA Records. When he went to California to record their first album, the band destroyed their van. As a result of the near-death experience, Durst made amends with Borland, who rejoed in the band. [4] After a dispute with Mojo, Limp Bizkit signed with Flip, a subsidiary of Interscope Records. Arvizu convinced Ross Robinson to listen to the demo. Robinson failed to listen to it until it was reviewed by his girlfriend. Impressed by the motivation and sound of the band, Robinson produced Limp Bizkit's debut, which was recorded at Indigo Ranch. Durst's troubles with his girlfriend inspired him to write the song Sour. [4] The mood and tone set by Robinson in the studio allowed the band to improvise; a recording of the band improvising appeared as the final track on the album, Everything. [4] Despite the success of live performances of the band's cover of the song Faith, Robinson was against recording, which included heavier guitar playing and drumming, as well as DJ scratching, impressed him. [4] Robinson also bonded with Borland, whom he perceived as not taking the band seriously. [4] The progressive metal band Tool gave a strong influence in forming the sound of the album, particularly in the song Nobody Loves Me, which contains an analysis in which Durst imitated the singing style of Maynard James Keenan. [4] Continuing the band's policy of using names that would repel potential listeners, the band mentioned the album using part of the phrase queer as a three dollar bill and adding the word Y'all for Florida taste, naming the album featured an abrasive, angry sound that Limp Bizkit used to attract listeners to their music. [4] After the band completed the recording, they toured with Korn and Helmet in 1997. Critics reacted unfavorably to korn and Slap Bizkit's performances; Milwaukee Journal-Sentinel music critic Jon M. Gilbertson criticized Durst's performance, stating The one attention-grabbing moment of Limp Bizkit's rap/thrash show was when the singer expressed a desire for gay men to be 'stomping'. Which isn't remotely rebellious. It's just childish. [4] That same year, they also served in particular as a act on the album of the year Tour for Faith No More, a band often credited as paving the way for Limp Bizkit and the now metal genre. [7] They were subjected to a hostile reception from Faith fans no more, [8] with the group's keyboardist Roddy Bottum later recalling That guy Fred Durst had a really bad attitude. He was a bit of a jerk. I remembered he called the audience faggots at a show when they booed him. Not a good scene. [9] Nobody Loves Me (1997) This distribution of the song Nobody Loves Me was inspired by the progressive metal band Tool. Limp Bizkit singer Fred Durst imitates the singing style of Maynard James Keenan in this sample. Having trouble playing this file? See media help. Interscope proposed to the band that the label pay $5,000 to ensure that a Portland, Oregon radio station play the song Fifty Times Counterfeit, preceded and concluded with an announcement that the airtime was paid for by Interscope. [10] [11] Paid air time was criticized by the media, who saw it as payola. [10] [11] The band's manager Jeff Kwatinetz later described the plan as a brilliant marketing move. [10] Durst stated, It worked, but it's not that cool of a thing. [10] After counterfeit's release as the single, Three Dollar Bill, Yall was released on July 1, 1997, and met with minimal response. AllMusic writer Stephen Thomas Erlewine wrote: They may not have many original ideas... but they do the sound right. They have a powerful rhythm section and memorable hooks, most of which make up for uneven, Robert Christgau broke the album. [13] Despite the minimal reaction to his band's album, Durst was named Senior Vice President of A&R at Interscope [14] Limp Bizkit joined the Warped Tour and performed alongside the bands Pennywise, Mighty Bosstones, Sick of It All, Lagwagon and Blink-182. [10] In addition to traveling with Primus and Deftones, Slap Bizkit headlined Ladies Night in Cambodia's club tour, which was intended to diversify the band's fan base, which was largely male, by offering free tickets to female fan base. [10] In 1998, Limp Bizkit toured soulfly with Soulfly and Cold on Soulfly's first European tour. [10] Touring consistently increased Bizkit's Limp success, and the second single from Three Dollar Bill, Yall, a cover of George Michael's Faith, became a successful radio hit, leading to a slot on Ozzfest, a tour hosted by Ozzy and Sharon Osbourne. [10] In July, Lynn Street of Snot arrested after he emerged naked from limp bizkit's support toilet, and was charged with indecent exposure. [10] [15] Because Limp Bizkit's fans would often break through the barricades, the band almost became after two days. [10] In August, John Otto spent the night in prison in Auburn Hills, Michigan, on a misdemeanor charge of carrying a concealed weapon, after allegedly firing a BB gun and being arrested for carrying a switchblade. [10] After completing Ozzfest. Limp Bizkit took a break from performing, and later performed on Korn's Family Values Tour. Durst also directed a music video for the band's single Faith in promotion for his appearance in the film Very Bad Things, but was not satisfied with it and directed a second video that paid tribute to tour mates such as Primus, Deftones and Korn, who appeared in the video. [10] Borland stated in an interview that George Michael, the writer of the song, hated the cover and hated us for doing it. [10] Significant Other (1999, DJ Lethal expanded his role as sound designer for the band. After Faith's radio success, the band was determined to record the follow-up to their first album to show that they were not a Korn soundalike or a cover band; the band began writing an album that dealt with issues arising from their new found fame. [16] Terry Date, who had produced albums for Pantera, White Zombie and Deftones, was chosen to produce the album. [17] The band allowed Durst and Lethal to investigate their hip hop origins by including a song with Method Man. The song was originally titled Shut the Fuck Up, but was renamed N 2 Gether Now for marketing purposes. [17] The album also featured guest appearances by Stone Temple Pilots singer Scott Weiland, Korn's Jonathan Davis and Staind singer Aaron Lewis, as well as interludes by Les Claypool and Matt Pinfield. [17] Significant Other saw Limp Bizkit achieving a new level of commercial success; the band was featured on the covers of popular music magazines, including Spider, and now stood repeatedly harassed for signatures; the band was allowed to communicate directly with their fans on a Website of Dike 99. [18] Durst also moved from Jacksonville to Los Angeles. Significant Other was seen as an improvement over their debut, and was generally well received by critics with mixed to positive reviews. However, the band also continued to be criticized by the media; an article profiling the band in Spin and discussing Significant Other claimed that Limp Bizkit had yet to write a good song, and musicians Marilyn Manson and Trent Reznor criticized the band. [18] Nobody Like You, from their second album Significant Other, which is here attractive. This sample also highlights the guest vocals of Korn's Jonathan Davis and Stone Temple Pilots singer Scott Weiland. Pasture. play this file? See media help. The band promoted the album by playing unannounced concerts in Detroit and Chicago, as radio stations received numerous requests for the album's first single, Nookie. [14] Significant Other climbed to No. 1 on the Billboard 200, selling 643,874 copies in its first week of release. [14] In its second week of release, the album sold an additional 335,000 copies. [14] On the band's limptropolis tour with Kid Rock, Sam Rivers skipped his bass in frustration at the bad sound of the venue, cutting his hand. After his hand was attached in a hospital, Rivers returned to finish the set. [14] On July 12, Durst allegedly kicked a security guard in the head during a performance in St. Paul, Minnesota, and was later arrested on assault charges. [14] The band's further critiques appeared in Rolling Stone and The New York Times. [14] New York Times writer Ann Powers wrote: DJ Lethal used his turntables as a metal guitar, riffing expansively and going for effects instead of rhythm. John Otto on drums and Sam Rivers on bass never tried to get funky, instead sending hip-hop break-beat-based structure into a backbone for power chords. This makes for a hybrid that would be more interesting if the band didn't constantly get stuck in boring tempos, and if Mr. Durst had any talent as a singer. [14] In the summer of 1999, Limp Bizkit played on the highly anticipated Woodstock '99 show in front of about 200,000 people. Violent action ensued during and after their performance, including fans tearing plywood off the walls during a performance of the song Break Stuff. Several sexual assaults were reported in the aftermath of the concert. [6] [14] [19] Durst stated during the concert, Humans are hurt. Don't let anyone get hurt. But I don't think you should take it easy. That's what Alanis Morissette made you bastards do. If anyone falls, pick them up. We've already cut the negative energy out of the way. Now we want to let out the positive energy. [14] Durst later stated in an interview, I didn't see anyone getting hurt. You don't see that. When you look out at a sea of people and the stage is twenty feet in the air and you perform, and you feel your music, how do they expect us to see something bad going on? [14] Les Claypool told The San Francisco Examiner, Woodstock was just Durst being Durst. His attitude is no press is bad press, so he brings it on himself. He's wallowing in it. Still, he's a great guy. [14] Durst saw the band in its music video for the Single Re-Arranged, which depicted the band members who sentenced death sentences for their received in the consultations. The video ended with angry witnesses watching as the band drowned in milk while performing the the Durst later testified that the promoters of Woodstock '99 were to blame for booking his band, because of their reputation for raucous performances. [14] Despite this controversy, major other remained at Number 1 on the Billboard charts, and the band headlined the year's Family Values Tour. [14] Durst directed a music video for N 2 Gether Now in which Method Man and Pauly Shore, and was inspired by Inspector Clouseau's battles with his butler, Cato Fong, in the Pink Panther film series. [14] Chocolate Starfish and the Hot Dog Flavored Water (2000-2001) In 2000, Durst announced that the band would release chocolate starfish and the Hot Dog Flavored Water. The press thought he was joking about this title. [20] The album title is intended to sound like a fictional band; the phrase Chocolate Starfish refers to the human anus, and Durst himself, who has often been called a dick. [20] Borland was contributing the other half of the album's title when the band stood around at a truck stop, looking at bottles of flavored water, and Borland joked that the truck stop had no hot dog or meat-flavored water. [20] In June 2000, Limp Bizkit performed at the WXRK Dysfunctional Family Picnic, but arrived an hour late for their set. [21] An Interscope spokesman stated that there was confusion about the set time of the band. [21] During the band's performance, Durst criticized Creed singer Scott Stapp, calling him an egomaniac. [21] In the summer, Bizkit's limp tour was sponsored by the controversial file sharing service Napster, doing free shows with a metal cage as the only thing that separates them from the public. [22] Durst was an outspoken propense of file sharing. [6] They also did a Guerilla Tour that involved the band setting up illegal and improvised public performances on rooftops and alleyways, some closed by the police. During the MTV Video Music Awards 2000, Durst performed Livin' It Up, a song from the upcoming album, as a duet with Christina Aguilera. In response to the performance, Filter frontman Richard Patrick was quoted as saying: Fred getting on stage with Christina Aguilera embarrassed us all. [23] In response to the negative reactions to the performance, Durst remarked: I've told you before, I did it all for the nookie, man. [23] In response to Durst's remark, Aguilera noted, He received no nookie. [24] Released on October 17, Chocolate Starfish and the Hot Dog Flavored Water set a record for highest first week of release. 400,000 of those happened during the first day, making it the fastest selling rock album ever, breaking the record held for 7 years by Pearl Jam's Vs. [25] Chocolate Starfish and the Hot Dog Dog Water was certified Gold, Platinum. [26] The album received mixed reviews, [27] with Stephen Thomas Erlewine of Allmusic writing, Durst self-pitying and giving away the monotonous music that the starfish band chocolate struck out very quickly – it's the sound of a band determined to deliver a sequel in a finite amount of time. [28] Entertainment weekly writer David Browne named it as the worst album title of 2000. [29] During a 2001 tour of Australia at the Big Day Festival in Sydney, fans rushed the stage into the mosh pit, and teenager Jessica Michalik died of asphyxiation. In court, Durst, represented by longtime attorney, Ed McPherson, testified that he had warned concert organizers Aaron Jackson, Will Pearce and Amar Tailor, and also promoter Vivian Lees, of the potential dangers of such minimal security. [30] After watching videotapes and hearing witness statements, however, the coroner said it was clear that the density of the crowd was dangerous at the time The Slap Bizkit took the stage, stating that Fred Durst should have acted more responsibly when the problem because of the teenager's death. [32] Later in 2001, numerous hip-hop artists including P. Diddy, Timbaland, Bubba Sparxxx and Everlast remixed the band's famous songs into hip-hop versions to add their own styles and changes. The album was called New Old Songs. Departure of Borland and Results May Vary (2001-2003) In October 2001, Durst released a statement on their website stating that Limp Bizkit and Wes Bizkit and Borland will continue their musical careers. Both wish each other every success in all future efforts. [33] When asked why Borland quit the band, Ross Robinson stated that he quit because He no longer sold out for money. [34] After holding a nationwide audition for a new guitarist, called Put Your Guitar Where Your Mouth Is,[35] the band recorded with snot guitarist Mike Smith, but later deleted their recording sessions with Smith, saying We are the type of people who remain true to our family and our instincts and will act on intuition as a whole at any time. Mike wasn't the man. We had fun with him, but always knew, in the back, that he wasn't where we needed him to re-join the group. Borland stated that 75% or more of all emails pleaded for him not to return to the band. [38] After recording another album without Smith, the band scrapped the new new and collected a new album that combines songs from different sessions. [36] During the production of the album, bipolar's working title[36] changed to Panty Sniffer,[36] and was completed under the title Results May Varie. Under Durst's sole direction, the album included a variety of styles, [39] and featured a cover of Whoachter Blue Eyes, which differed from the arrangement of the original in its inclusion of a Talk & amp; Play during the song's bridge. [36] In the summer of 2003, Limp Bizkit participants threw items and heckled Durst from the moment he walked on stage. With the crowd chanting Fuck Fred Durst and continuing their attack on him, Durst threw the microphone down after six songs and walked off stage, but not before heckling the crowd back. He repeatedly said: Limp Bizkit are the best band in the world! until a roadie took his microphone away. [40] An article in the Sun-Times stated that hostility was started by radio personality Mancow. [41] The May Vary results were released on September 23, 2003, and received largely unfavorable reviews. [42] Allmusic reviewer Stephen Thomas Erlewine panned the album, writing, the music has no melody, hooks, or energy, [and] all the attention is focused on the clown jumping up and down and screaming up front, and long before the record is over, you're left wondering, how the hell did he ever get this mess out? [36] The Guardian reviewer Caroline Sullivan wrote: At least Limp Bizkit cannot be accused of festering in the rap-rock ghetto... But Durst's problems are always present – and does anyone still care? [39] Despite criticism of the album, it was a commercial success, reaching at No. 3 on the Billboard 200. [43] Borland's return, The Unquestionable Truth (Part 1), described the album's leading track The Propaganda as a skirling swirl of darkness. [44] Problems playing this file? See media help. In August 2004, Borland rejoined Limp Bizkit, which began recording an EP, The Unquestionable Truth (Part 1). [37] In May, The Unquestionable Truth (Part 1) was released. Sammy Siegler took over drum duties for the band for much of the EP, with a more experimental sound, described by Allmusic writer Stephen Thomas Erlewine as neo-prog alt-metal. [45] At Durst's insistence, the album was released as an underground album, without any advertising or promotion. [46] [47] Borland disagreed with the decision, suggesting that it was self-sabotage: he was already unhappy with the music, and he didn't really want to put it there. [47] The EP received mixed reviews. Stephen Thomas Erlewine praised the music, calling it a step in law – it is more ambitious, dramatic and aggressive, built on pummeling verses and stop-start choruses. However, he felt that the band was being held back by Durst, whom he called the most particularly unpleasant, absurd frontman in rock. [45] IGN writer Spence D. gave it a mixed view as well, as he felt that the album lacked direction, but that showed potential for the band's musical growth. [44] The Unquestionable Truth (Part 1) sold more than 37,000 copies worldwide, peaking at number 24 on the Billboard 200. [43] [48] After the release of the band's Greatest Hitz album, the band went on hiatus. [47] [49] Borland stated that it was unlikely that a sequel to The Indisputable Truth would be produced and that as of now, none of my future plans include Slap Bizkit. [47] [50] Reunion, Gold Cobra and departure from Interscope (2009-2011) Shotgun (2011) Shotgun is known for featuring a guitar solo by Wes Borland. Having trouble playing this file? See media help. Borland, Otto (background) and Durst performing live. In 2009 Limp Bizkit was reunited with Borland and launched the Unicorns N' Rainbows Tour. [51] Durst announced that they had begun to record a new album, that Borland titled Golden Cobra. [52] [53] Borland said that the title has no meaning, and that it was chosen because it fit the style of music the band wrote for the album. [53] The band recorded a spoken intro written by Durst and performed by Kiss member Gene Simmons for the album. [54] [55] The band also recorded additional non-album tracks, including Combat Jazz, which featured rapper Raekwon and MiddleFiner, featuring Paul Wall. [55] Shotgun was released as a single on May 17, 2011. The song is known for his guitar solo by Borland, something the band is not known for. [56] Shotgun'] feels like Bizkit approached the signature style on Three Dollar Bill Y'All and Significant Other with another decade-plus of instrumental experience and virtuosity, carving out a banger who could get donkeys moving in the club or fists flying into the mosh pit. [57] Gold Cobra was released on June 28 and received mixed to positive reviews. [58] AllMusic's Stephen Thomas Erlewine called it a return to the full-throttled bout of Three Dollar Bill Y'All. [50] IGN writer Chad Grischow wrote: Although far from their best work, Limp Bizkit's latest proves at least that their 2005 Greatest Hitz album may have been premature. [59] Metal Hammer writer Terry Bezer reviewed the album, writing Aside from the odd duff moment, Gold Cobra throws the hot shit that will bounce you into the mosh pit over and over again. [56] The launched the Golden Cobra Journey in support of the album. A music video for the title track was released. [60] Gold Cobra has sold almost almost copies in the United States alone and peaked at number 16 on the Billboard 200; however, the band left Interscope after the release of the album. [61] Stampede of the Disco Elephants (2012-present) In February 2012, the band returned to Australia for the first time in 11 years to perform at the Soundwave festival. [62] Durst dedicated the shows to Jessica Michalik, who died during the Limp Bizkit signed with Cash Money Records. [61] [64] [65] After a dispute between Durst, Deadly and Otto over the latter two's alleged chronic drug and alcohol use, DJ Lethal angrily left the band. [66] DJ Lethal later posted an apology to the band on Twitter,[67] but was eventually not allowed back into the song Champions by Kevin Rudolf, used as the theme for WWE Night of Champions. The song debuted on WWE Raw on September 3, 2012. It was the first time Limp Bizkit has worked with WWE since 2003. [70] He has been in and out. I know what he wants to be in the band. When we got him back, nothing came of material coming out of him to add to the record. We'll talk to him. We've recently opened the dialogue with him, and we'll see what happens. —Wes Borland on the band's relationship with DJ Lethal[71] The band recorded their seventh studio album, Stampede of the Disco Elephants[72] with producer Ross Robinson,[73][74] who also produced the band's debut album, Three Dollar Bill, Yall, and their 2005 album The Unquestionable Truth (Part 1). [71] On March 24, 2013, the album's first single, Ready to Go (with Lil Wayne), was released by the band via their official Facebook and Twitter accounts. [76] In December, the band released the previously leaked song Lightz, along with an accompanying music video. [77] The album's next single, Endless Slaughter was set to be released only on cassette and during concerts, [78] but can be downloaded at the band had left Cash Money and regained its independence. The split was performed amicably, and Fred says we really like the jam we did with Lil Wayne, though. We love that song. [79] Limp Bizkit headlined the ShipRocked 2015 cruise from February 2-6. Other band announced their big 2015 tour called Money Sucks, a Russian 20-date tour that will take place in October and November, in honor of the 20th anniversary of Limp Bizkit. The tour name was a nod to the difficult economic situation that was confronted at the time. [80] [81] [82] Before the band traveled to Europe to attend the Money Sucks Tour, Sam Rivers was diagnosed with a degenerative disease from spine disks and that was complicated because of a pinched nerve, causing a lot of pain in such an area, which prevented him from being with the band. [83] 23-year-old German bassist Samuel Gerhard Mpungu replaced Rivers for the tour. [84] Fred Durst & amp; Wes Borland perform at KROQ Weenie Roast 2019. Limp Bizkit has offered several concerts in the UK alongside Korn in the winter of 2016. [85] Regarding this tour Fred says: You may have experienced many cool concerts in your life, but I can guarantee you that an evening with Korn and Limp Bizkit will always and forever be your favorite. No one brings the party harder, heavier and more exciting than us. Nobody. And... make sure you get a lot of rest the night before. It's time to bring it back! [86] Due to little information and constant delays for stampede's release, in an interview/interview with the podcast Someone Who Is Not Me, Wes said that Fred is not happy with it, even if it takes years and years. DJ Lethal & amp; Fred Durst perform with Limp Bizkit at Quebec Agora Fest 2019. DJ Lethal resumed performing with the band on March 17, 2018 at the Storm the Gates festival in Auckland, New Zealand. [88] On July 8, 2019, the band played a new song from their upcoming album called Wasteoid live in Paris. [89] Style, influences, and legacy Music, influences, and lyrics Falsified by Slap Bizkit Counterfeit, which appears on the band's 1997 debut, Three Dollar Bill, Yall, is noted for kinetic, frenzied energy[12] and a mix of music styles. Having trouble playing this file? See media help. Durst wanted Limp Bizkit to become a megaband that could cross over to as many different musical styles as possible. [4] Limp Bizkit's music is primarily described as now metal, is adept at drumming in a variety of styles ranging from Brazilian and Afro-Cuban music to bebop and funk. Dj Lethal acts as sound designer for the band and shapes their sounds. ... It's all things you haven't heard before. I'm trying to be like another guitarist. [4] Borland's guitar playing is experimental and not traditional, and he is known for his creative use six- and seven-string guitars. [112] Three Dollar Bill, Yall features him playing without a guitar playing melodic notes, and the other playing melodic notes, and the other playing melodic notes and the other playing without a guitar playing without a guitar playing melodic notes and the other playing melo note rhythms, sometimes accompanied by the muffling of his strings with his left hand, creating a percussive sound. [113] Borland has also used unevenly accented synchronized sixteenth notes to create a disorienting effect, and hypnotic, thumping licks. [113] The song Stuck uses a sustain pedal in the first bar, and muted riffs in the second bar. [113] AllMusic writer Stephen Thomas Erlewine said their album, Significant Other, contains flourishes of neo-psychedelia on pummeling metal songs and swirls of strings, even crooning, on the most unexpected backdrop. [114] The band did not use solos until Golden Cobra (except the song Under The Gun Results May Vary), however, during the recording of The Significant Other, the drummer John Otto performed an extended solo in the middle of the song Nobody Like Uuit. [17] Also, drum solo can be heard on 9 Teen 90 Nine from the same album. Durst's lyrics are often profane, scatological or angry. [28] [50] Much of Durst's lyrical inspiration came from growing up and his personal life. [4] The song Sour, from the album Three Dollar Bill, Yall, was inspired by Durst's problems with his girlfriend. [4] His break with her inspired the Significant Other songs Nookie and Re-Arranged. [16] In describing Bizkit's Limp lyrics, The Michigan Daily said: In a less severe vein, Limp Bizkit used the nu-metal sound as a way to spin testosterone-fueled fantasies into snarky white-boy rap. Oddly enough, the audience took frontman Fred Durst more seriously than he wanted to, without seeing the intentional silliness in many of his songs. [115] Limp Bizkit's lyrics have also been described as misogynistic. [116] Indisputable Truth (Part 1) focuses on more serious and darker lyrical subject matter, including Catholic cases of sexual abuse, terrorism and notoriety. [45] Limp Bizkit's influences include The Jesus Lizard, Tomahawk, Dave Matthews Band, Portishead, Mr. Bungle, Sepultura, Ministry, Prong, Tool, Primus, Pantera, Minor Threat, Angry Samoans, Black Flag, the Fat Boys, the Treacherous Three, the Cold Crush Brothers, Urban Dance Squad, Rage Against the Machine and Korn. [117] [118] [119] [120] [121] [122] Awards and recognition Limp Bizkit has been nominated for and won several awards. [123] Limp Bizkit has been nominated for three Grammy Awards, including Best Hard Rock Performance (Nookie), Best Rock Album (Significant Other) and Best Hard Rock Performance (Take A Look Around). Bizkit has been nominated for 3 American Music Awards for Favorite Alternative Artist, winning one of them in 2002. In 1999, the band won the Maximum Vision Award at the Music Video Awards for their music video Nookie[124] At the 2000 and 2001 Blockbuster Awards, the band won the Favorite Group (Rock) award. [125] [126] That year also saw the band win a MuchMusic Award for Best International Video, in honor of their video for the song Break Stuff. [123] At the 2001 ECHO Awards, the band won the Hall of Fame award. [128] Further expansion on the group's performance and popularity, they were also the first group inducted into MTV's Total Request Live Hall of Fame on May 26, 2001. [129] [130] Richard Cheese performed a lounge rendition of the songs Nookie and Break Stuff on his debut album, Lounge Against the Machine. [131] Weird Al Yankovic's Angry White Boy Polka medley included Limp Bizkit's song My Way. [132] The Vitamin String Quartet recorded a tribute album called The String Quartet Tribute to Limp Bizkit: Break Stuff, which includes reinterpretations of the band's songs performed by a violinist supported by cellos, synthesizers, and keyboard percussion. [133] Girl Talk sampled Nookie and Break Stuff in the song Friends-4-Ever, which appears on his album Secret Diary. [132] The Blackout covered My Generation for the compilation Higher Voltage!: Another Brief History of Rock. [134] Bands citing Limp Bizkit as an influence on their music include the progressive metal band Proyecto Eskhata. [135] While Limp Bizkit's popularity has declined in the United States since the mid-2000s, it has been noted in the media that the band is still very popular in Russia. He described the character and said, I'm going on stage with almost nothing. I'm wearing underwear and boots, and I paint my whole head black - from the neck up - and I have the black contacts. All you see are these glowing teeth. [112] Borland's black contacts were adapted for him by a company noted for making contacts for the science fiction TV series Babylon 5. [112] In addition to Borland's visual appearance, the band has also used extensive stage setups in their performances. Their Ladies Night in Cambodia club tour visually paid tribute to the film Apocalypse Now, with an elaborate stage setup that featured an empty Jeep, camouflage mesh and palm trees. [10] During the band's journey with Primus, Limp Bizkit was inspired by Primus' trademark self-deprecatory slogan Primus sucks: Durst, Borland, they're fingering us back – and you know what that means to us – that they love us. It's like saying something is bad when you mean really well. Les Claypool came out the first night of the tour and got a big kick out of it. We thought it was the right idea. It makes hecklers go 'huh.' [10] During the band to use a 30-foot toilet as stage support, which they would emerge from during each performance; the band punctuated their sets by blushing cardboard cutouts of pop stars like Hanson and the Spice Girls. [10] During their appearance at the first Tour of Family Values, Flaccid Bizkit performed on a series that the Los Angeles Times described as a mix of The Worlds War and Mars Attacks. The band came out of a spaceship during the tour and Borland continued to experiment with visual appearances. [10] During the band's Halloween performance on the trip, each of the members of the band dressed as Presley at various stages in his career.
