G I don't arrange a terrible lot of songs myself, but it's something I want to fix. I decided to Ball rolling with my effort at Bobby McFerrin's 1988 classic, Don't worry Happy.I remember hearing this song back as a young whip snacker (I would have been 9 when it was released) and it's really stuck with me – it's a catchy tune with a pretty positive message. Anyway, enough rambling, let's get on with the song. It's all about the low GFor this arrangement, first of all it's a low G arrangement That I play on my Outside Tenor. If you want to play it on high G ukulele, there are only a handful of notes that don't quite sound right. I won't let it put you off. Second thing to say is that I have converted it to the key of C that I think works really well on this song, it means you won't be able to play it over the record, but it is really the purpose of a chorth melody arrangement. Here I play through the arrangement. I have to point out that I don't stick to it exactly. I played with the timings and felt through. The TabHere's tab, no crazy choirs, no difficult fingers. In fact, we dare not even pass the third concern at any point. If you want to grab the printable PDF of this tab, click the button at the bottom of the page. TipsIn terms of playing this one, I don't use a specific way to select the notes. I mostly pick with a combination of my thumb, index finger and second finger. I let my thumb pick up the G and C strings with my index and second pick up the E and a strings. The strums I sometimes throw in are all done with my thumb. I tend to lean on my thumb quite a lot on arrangements with sporadic sporadic struggles in them. If you have an explosion at this arrangement, let me know – I'd like to see your videos and hear your audio files.
