Audi AG (Audi) is a German automotive brand founded in 1909 by August Horst. Audi, Horch (a car brand founded by August Horst in 1899), Wanderer and DKW merged into Auto Union AG in 1932. The Audi four-ring emblem represents these four companies. At the end of World War II, the Auto Union factories were taken over by the Soviet Union, which occupied the eastern part of Germany. Auto Union GmbH was restarted in Bavaria, in western Germany, in 1949 and produced cars, delivery vans and motorcycles under the DKW brand, all with two-stroke engines. DKW pioneered front wheels with transversely mounted engines in the early 1930s. Daimler-Benz AG bought much of Auto Union in 1958 and the rest of the shares in 1959. Volkswagen bought half of the Auto Union in 1964 and the rest in 1966. The brand name Audi has been revived with a new model car with a Four-stroke Mercedes engine developed in 1965. The last DKW was produced in 1966. NSU, a German company founded in 1873, producing cars between 1906 and 1929 and again from 1958 to 1977, merged with Audi in 1969. Many of the Audi models produced after Volkswagen took over the brand were VW with Audi badges. In secret and in opposition to its parent company, Volkswagen, Audi developed the Audi 100. The model was launched in 1968, reviving the identity of the Audi brand. The quattro all-wheel drive system, a development from the systems used in DKW Munga and Volkswagen Itlis, both small four-wheel drive vehicles, was introduced in 1980 by the audi Quattro car performance, a coupe with constant four-wheel drive. The quattro all-wheel drive system was later implemented for the other models in the Audi range. Volkswagen transformed Audi into the premium brand group in 1980 and 90. Audi opened its doors for business in 1910 by founder August Horch. Mr. Horch left a company after 10 years that he formed and formed and called it Audi, which is a Latin translation of his name August, which how the name came to be. Audi was one of many automakers then and in 1932 joined three different automakers and created the Auto Union. Then, in 1964, Volkswagen bought Audi, the only brand that remained in the Auto Union. We have a number of Audi brochures below, but we are always for more to share with our reader. With the resources of Volkswagen and the craftsmanship of Audi brand began to grow and during the 1970s launched an impressive line of vehicles, which included Fox coupe, Fox sedan and 100LS luxury sedan, which was replaced by 5000 a few years later. They were a great success in the United States, which really kicked off Audi's rise in North America and soon there were Audi brochures. In 1980 Audi introduced Quattro, which was an all-traction sport which has become very popular. This amazing AWD feature has created huge fans at the racetrack and in the street, which soon became part of the entire Audi line of luxury cars and SUVs. The early 1980s were turbulent years for the automaker, which introduced 4000 to replace well, I know Fox and the incredibly successful and popular 5000 has been redesigned. The 5000 almost doubled its sales after redesign. However, later in the 5000 decade suffered some bad release due to an unintentional acceleration charge (like so many other automakers), which was later found to be incorrect. This caused sales to drop sharply, which basically destroyed the Audi brand. Audi overcame difficulties and continued to go at full speed ahead. In 1980 he saw an impressive line of vehicles launched by Audi, which included 80 and 90, which replaced 4000, and 100 and 200 replace 5000. The newest facilities included turbo engines, all traction and V8s. In the 1990s Audi debuted the A4, A6 which replaced 100, the construction of the A8 aluminum and the Cabriolet. Shortly after these I saw a sports line that hosted the S4, S6 and S8. See Audi brochures below for more information. Audi continued to launch an impressive line of world-class cars rolled into the new century and which included the Hatchback A3, Q5 SUV, A5 coupe, R8 sports car, A7 sedan and TT sport coupe and roadster. All these new vehicles have created a great demand for the Audi line, which continues to produce quality, sporty, and luxury vehicles today.
