In the dark my army groped our way, felt our way to the road, we do not know the way. We had bread, water and a few other staples, not those curved metal things, but basic things. We were dressed and dressed in black hats and vests, I looked better because my mesh shorts were fresh. We looked way up at the citadel, a strong castle on the hill. It belonged to one R. J. Blake, While the town was starving, he dined on steaks. While we worked hard to feed our children, he threw fancy parties with Paris Hilton.This dude was a tycoon, I mean, he made more money from the business than Bill Gates.He had more income than Mickey D's, more revenue stream than Mississippi.We're coming'u2026 I don't want to denigrate Blake, say evil when the kids on the block see it, they start working. Some think the rich deserve to be rich, but for me it's a misconception, a false belief.'Because this guy put me in the word team, it was up to us to step in and intervene. We moved the shadow into the shade to his mansion, then crept through the window as Robin and Batman.We collected his jewelry, robbed and looted to give to the poor who face daily hunger. Careful, gently and gently, We grabbed his silverware, Xbox and TVs.But then I heard a voice: You'll rue that day! You'll soon regret it, but never forget it. You didn't earn a penny! You are surrounded by my army of mercenaries. They arrested us, Holmes, now I live in a prison that Blake partly owns. What do you think? I'm a thug and a thief? Or Robin Hood, who just couldn't dodge the police? We will up'u2026 , standards: id:591, notation:CCSS. ELA-LITERACY.
