Enhanced guide for occupational exploration career references are important for job seekers, students, career changers, counselors. Describes the largest 2,800 jobs (more than 95% of the workforce), used the latest description provided by U.S. Department of Labor. The Guide to Occupations Exploration contains a new approach to presenting employment information for use in career exploration. It is in nontechnical language and simple style aimed at any reader with or without the help of counseling. The data is organized into 12 areas of interest, 11 of which correspond directly to the interest factors in the new Uses Interest Inventory currently being developed. Each region contains a working group grouped according to the common interests, capabilities, and adaptability of the workers. Jobs in each group are grouped for easy reading. Descriptive materials for areas and groups focus on individual characteristics as they relate to the characteristics required by the work. It is anticipated that this guide will provide an easy method to connect potential people with the requirements of the work, which has not been possible with previous work exploration tools. In addition, it presents students, laypeople, and others who do not speak technical languages with the means of self-exploration and job opportunities that match their potential. ROBERT C. DROEGE, U.S. Employment Services Aptitude and Interest Testing for Job Exploration; Journal of Employment Counseling, 101002/2161-1920.1983.tb00778.x, 20, 4, (179-185), (2011). ROBERT C.
