Relationships with family and friends grow from more personal relationships. So unless you make the point you want, your family may not even see you a business. Familiarity is in danger. For example, as much as your mother loves you, she's seen you throw your worst nose, crouching, tutt rings, liars, tantrums. Perhaps she secretly has a fear that if she introduces her best friend to you for business, you'll embarrass her. They know you, they trust you, but they may hesitate to mix business with personal relationships. In addition, they may not understand how to see you. In 1987, at the invitation of a local called Bill, he went to a rural area of Wyoming and launched a new BNI group for about 30 interested people. He introduced me to the group, and I spent the next time and told them howSpecifically, BNI worked. By this time I had done about 50 kickoffs in three states, but I read the audience and learned to recognize when the lights turned on and they got the concept. Here in Norman's Land, Wyoming went out of light on the morning of this kick-off and they looked at me with a white stare. I finished my story and asked if they had any questions. One man -- I call him Frank -- ignored me, but looked over Bill and said, Bayul? What is the hay that must come here every week for these meetings? We don't have to come to these Dan meetings. At that point, I'll give you an introduction to each other, oh, man, I thought I flew five hours to Wyoming to explain how this works, and this guy says, why meet. But Bill looked over the man and asked, Frank, how much do we know each other? Frank said, Oh, about 15 years. In 15 years, Frank, how many referrals have you given me? Uh, I don't think I'm giving you anything. And how many times have I introduced you in 15 years? Well, shoot, you don't even give me anything. Bill Bill said, Frank, that's why we have to come here every week and go through this. Otherwise, we are all friends, but we don't help each other in business. In the same way, not only Frank but also the entire group was shining. Everyone else in the room knew, they were all friends, yet no one of them thought of helping each other by passing business referrals. All of a sudden, they understood that they needed a system that is a referral networking group they met regularly to get them to do what they might have been doing. Inexperienced networkers often don't think about asking for referrals other than through their customers, and their number and quality are greatly limited. Business users who participate in referral network groups broaden their horizons, but misunderstand that only additional referrals are made from other group members. In fact, anyone, including friends and family, can be trained to introduce your business to you. One of the first things you can do is get a chiropractor to listen to keywords like back pain and be aware of situations where you can provide a solution to someone's problem through you. A lot of research has been done on the reticulated activation system. Remember, as soon as you drove the new red Honda Accode out of the lot, you started seeing people driving the red Honda Accode everywhere you saw it? You see things related to you. I don't know what's involved. Train your referral source's reticulated activation system and hear about lift is important to be related to referrals. More importantly, warn your own reticulated activation system to recognize when you have the opportunity to introduce one of your referral partners. When you do this, you are developing the idea of true referrals in yourself - the awareness that referrals can come from anyone, anytime, anywhere - and you are learning to speak the language of referrals in all your relationships, if appropriate or convenient. If you are a selfish and useful partner in your external relationship, others will be happy to go back and forth between business referrals. YouTube Embedded Videos: HHS OCR - Communication with family, friends, and others related to your care Privacy rules do not require healthcare organizations or healthcare organizations to share information with family and friends unless you are an individual delegate. However, if a provider or plan is involved in your medical or medical payment, you can share your information with family and friends; you tell the provider or plan that it can be, you do not object to the sharing of information, or use its professional judgment, provider or plan believe that you do not disagree. If you don't object, the doctor can talk with friends who go to the hospital with you and family members who pay for medical expenses. If you send your friends to receive your prescription, you can assume that the pharmacist does not object to that you are given the drug. Providers can share information with these people if you think this is in your best interest if you are not there or when you are injured and cannot give permission.
