Ellington Field Joint Reserve Base is the 147th base of the Texas Air National Guard. Ellington Field Joint Reserve Base is a defense and homeland security compound in Houston, Texas that operates as a common reserve base through cooperative agreements between tenants. Ellington Field JRB is notable for having troo presence in all five U.S. armed forces: Army, Navy, Marines, Air Force and Coast Guard. The JRB is part of the larger city-owned Ellington Airport, which also hosts civilian and military aviation operations. Place View Greater Map History of Ellington Field JRB was built as an army of shortness of breath in 1917. It is named after Lt. Eric Lamar Ellington, who died four years earlier in a plane crash in San Diego, California. The Texas Air National Guard's 147th Reconnaissance Wing operates as a host unit for EFJRB due to its aviation focus on the facility, as well as being Texas ANG's position as the primary military tenant for more than much of the base's history. However, on the 75th day of the Army Reserves' 75th Army Texas Air National Guard 147. However, the army's reserve investigative command, led by a major general (or 2 stars), is the facility's high-ranking military headquarters, and the Navy has the largest reserve team presence. Mission A 147 Reconnaissance Wing operates the MQ-1B Predator remotely piloted aircraft.
