Before you start discussing the different tools to help locate your loved one, we will quickly make it clear that you will need to have some vital identification information on hand in order to do so. This information includes: The full legal name of your loved one (first, medium and last)Your date of birthThe status in which aNote is being held may suggest or require additional information about your loved one, depending on the individual circumstances As we go through this list, we will make clear what this information is and where it applies. Now, for the internal location tools. As we said, the BOP search tool only shows results for federal inmates. To find an inmate who is being held in a local jail or a state prison, you will want to use the state government website where your loved one is located. While we won't take you through the step-by-step process of finding an inmate in each state, let's take a look at some examples. This is what you'll need if your loved one is imprisoned in New York: note that the Department's ID number or New York State ID number are meant to be used on your own. In other words, if any of these numbers are included, you do not need to include the name of the inmate and the year of birth. Similarly, to find an inmate in California, you will need to enter your full legal name or prison number if you know it: While most states provide the ability to search for an inmate on their official government website, others use a third-party search tool, which we will discuss in the next section. The Office of allows you to search your database of federal prisoners in order to locate your loved one and discover your contact information. Note that this database includes only inmates held in federal prisons - let's get to smaller prisons and prisons in one The BOP database also includes information about inmates who have been released, dating back to 1982. When you use the BOP search tool, you can search for a prisoner by name or by multiple identification numbers. First, let's look for an inmate with your name: Once again, searching for a common name without any additional information leads to a large number of search results. Also, keep in mind that the search engine limits the number of results to 100 - that is, a lot of other inmates under the name John Smith didn't even show up. Obviously, it's not likely that you'll face this issue, but it's definitely good to know. In any case, you can also reduce your search including the race, age, and sex of your loved one. Because this search tool doesn't offer any advanced search features, you may need to include this information to see fewer than 100 results. You can also search for a federal inmate using a number of different identification numbers, such as: BOP Registration Number DCDC NUMBER FBI NUMBER INS Because these identification numbers, of course, belong solely to your loved one, using this method is the best way to generate accurate results from the BOP site.
