Look like the innocent flower

Lady Macbeth is saying Macbeth has the appearance of an innocent while his true essence should be a snake - your hand, your tongue: look like an innocent flower but not be a snake below. He should be tempted to do evil with him, and he should have no regrets when he suffers what is considered necessary action. While Macbeth was written, the serpent believed that Satan was a tool used to seduce evil. Lady Macbeth is using this analogy to show Macbeth a real feeling and influence, not hiding from the evil character she believes she should have as a man, even though she seems as innocent as a flower. Shakespeare uses this metaphor with Lady Macbeth to show the power that Lady Macbeth has through a man that was unprecedented because he believed that only men had the qualities to show strength in the mean time. Described as a protagonist and influencer on other characters, Lady Macbeth shows respect for women, presenting ideas that most people would not have considered at the time. Lady Macbeth is speaking this line and ripping Macbeth. She says Macbeth needs to be Duncan's friend to invite him to his place for the party, but he's actually luring him into a trap that will kill him. She says you have to pretend to be an innocent flower, but instead a snake that lies beneath it.
