If you've just learned that your pet rabbit is pregnant and you're raising rabbits for the first time, you'll need to start preparing for birth! One of the best ways to do this is to provide your doe with birdhouses - a place where she can give birth to her children and keep them warm and safe for the first few weeks. The prospect of having baby bunnies in your home may seem a bit daunting, so finding the right birdhouse in which your mother's rabbit will be comfortable is very important. This will ensure a smoother whole process and baby rabbits are safe, safe and cared for. Below we have supplemented the guide to buying everything you need to know about rabbit birdhouses, including their use that look up when buying one and even some of our best picks out there on the market today. If you want to know more, keep reading more. Why my rabbit birdhouse? If you have a pregnant doe at home, the birdhouse is a necessity. These birdhouses replicate the burrows that rabbits give birth to in the wild, often without being much larger than the rabbits themselves and lined with herbs to create a soft and safe site for the birth of baby rabbits. Your doe needs rabbit birdhouses in her cage before she gives birth. This should be placed in their hut about 28 days pregnant, days before she gives birth. If you put the birdhouse too early, she won't understand what it's for, as her maternal instincts haven't been pushed yet. Even if your rabbit is not pregnant and is not preparing for the birth of babies, birdhouses can be a great thing to place in their home. As we mentioned above, it's almost like a burrow for rabbits and repeats the life that they would have had in the wild. It also doubles as a great place to hide, snooze, relax and stay warm, which is especially important if you live in colder climates and your bunny is outside. Types of Rabbit Nest boxesE few different types of rabbit nesting boxes are available. It will be up to you to decide which type will be best for your rabbit. It often depends on whether they use it for birth, or simply as a place to hang out! Wooden wooden birdhouse is the most natural feeling for your rabbit. However, wood can be slightly more difficult to keep clean and de-aging. Clean environment is very important for mother rabbits and kits. PlasticA plastic birdhouses are a good idea if you're concerned about keeping birdhouses clean. They are much easier to keep decatized. However, they are not always so durable and do not feel so natural to your rabbit. Metal rabbit birdhouse has two advantages: it is easy to wash and durable and durable. Again, however, they don't feel most natural to mom-rabbits. GrassA grass rabbit birdhouse box is not so common, and is often used as just a place for yours and play, not space for doses to give birth. However, because they are made of hay and grass, they are completely edisting and very good for your rabbit teeth and digestive system. Factors to consider when buying a Nesting Box There are a few things to consider when you buy rabbit birdhouses to make sure you get the right one for your rabbits. SizeSinteresting factor for consideration is the size of a rabbit nest box. Traditionally, these birdhouses are not much bigger than they do, and they just need enough space to move around and turn around. Too big and the rabbits won't feel safe and they will struggle to keep their children warm. However, if you use birdhouses as a space to sleep or play your rabbit, the size is entirely up to you! You can give them plenty of space, or you may want less space that they can rest an inch material, as we mentioned above, there are several different materials from which to make your birdhouse. The most common are wood, plastic, metal and grass, although some homemade birdhouses are also made of wire. The material of your birdhouse will depend on what your rabbit likes, and several other factors such as cleaning. GoalHow your rabbit gives birth, the birdhouse should be the right space for them. It should be the right size and the right stuff for them to feel comfortable inching however, if the birdhouse is just a place for your rabbit to enjoy, curl up and maybe sleep, then you have more freedom when it comes to buying one. DurabilityEaving a rabbit box will not be used if it breaks easily! Look for something strong and durable that will keep your rabbit safe. Rabbit birdhouse should be kept in a rabbit cage for up to 3 weeks after your doe has given birth, so keep this in mind. HeatNo important that you use rabbit birdhouses for, you want your rabbit to feel comfortable and warm inside. This is especially important if your rabbit gives birth because the kits need to be kept at the right temperature. If your rabbit lives on the street, they can use a rabbit birdhouse to keep warm during the winter months. What happens in a rabbit birdhouse? In the wild, the doe will house the herbs she found in her nesting area, making it soft and warm before placing the final layer of her own fur extracted from her body. When you fill a rabbit birdhouse, you should start with a pad of pure corrugated cardboard at the bottom of the box that has been cut according to the size of the floor. Then place half an inch of wood or pine chips in a box, followed by any type of soft herbal hay. The box should be filled quite high with hay, so it is warm and cozy for them! Bermuda herbs or alfalfa hay are often advised. Right before your doe is about to give birth, will pull the fur from her own body, just as she will do Wildlife. She will actually use her breathing to loosen the fur into a cotton lining, insulating the box and making the perfect space for her bunnies!
