Follow DIRECTV View Full FAQ Terms of Use I agree tos cancel @ladysara1 Very glad you were able to get a discounted price for one year. Not many people can get a discount like it currently, as special offers are being re-evaluated per some customers were too expensive. You're right, DirecTV/AT&T is not scamming retirees. TV is a luxury entertainment service so don't have fixed/low income programs like for other tools considered necessities (at the base level) such as phone, electric heating, etc. The question is some people out there feel they have the right to get what they want, without having to properly pay for it. That's why I always suggest for someone to review your services at full cost. That way even when you enjoy a discount, you know you can afford it going forward after the discount ends. And remember, these discounts count down on each monthly invoice so easy tracking to know when to expect that normal full invoice. Just make sure to read through the next bill, and order confirmation if you received one in your email, to make sure everything is as expected. The big thing to check is even if the bill is lower, to see if it's a monthly discount (for the year you mentioned), or if the agent just gave a one-time credit (a situation I've heard too often). About is the expected discount, then very happy for you and hope that everything goes If only a one-time credit, but bad by agent for giving the wrong expectations, at least it gives some breathing space while you decide what to do going forward.
