On June 12, 2020, the Babylon Bee published an article stating that online booklets and bricks and mortar like Barnes & Noble (B&N) were removing the Bible from their shelves because it contained the outdated idea that all humans were of a race created in The Image of God. Online and brick booklets and mortars across the country will no longer sell the Bible because of their outdated depictions of humanity, all of being of a race and made in the image of God. This item was not a factual recount of real-life events. The article originated on a website that describes its production as being humorous or satirical in nature, as follows: The Babylon Bee is the best satire site in the world, totally inerrant in all its true claims. We write satires about Christian things, political things and everyday life. While the Babylon Bee is a well-known satire site, this article was later reproduced on other sites such as truth4freedom. The Blogspot blog bosonmassachusetts also turned this idea into its own original piece of fiction, and an image purportedly showing a sign of No Bibles in a Barnes & Noble became the focal point of a petition about change.org. Barnes & Noble's fake sign was created by cutting a shutterstock image of a B&N store in Chicago and inserting a generic sign with fictitious verbiage: The rumor that Barnes & Noble pulled bibles off the shelves, however, is false. This statement originated on a satire site. Bibles can still be bought in jail. For the background, that's why we sometimes write about satire/humor. © 1996-2014, Amazon.com, Inc. or its affiliates eBay item number:124427361435 Seller assumes all responsibility for this listing.
