Whether you've downloaded so many applications you now have to navigate half a dozen screens to find the app you want, you download the wrong app, or you at some point, you need to delete the app from your iPad. However, you don't have to navigate through the settings or drag the icon to a special place. Here's how: Unwanted apps on the screen start shaking. A gray circular button with an X in the center appears in the upper-left corner of all apps on the screen. To remove the app from your iPad, tap one. A message box appears asking you to delete the app. You can delete as many apps as you want while the app icon is shaking. You can also move around the screen. When all unwanted apps are gone, click the Home button to remain in edit mode. You can delete most apps on your iPad, including apps that are preinstalled on your device. However, there are settings, app stores, safaris, contacts, and a few other things you can't delete. Apple doesn't allow you to remove these apps because removing them can be a bad user experience. However, you can hide many of these apps. If you set parental restrictions by opening the Settings app, tapping Screen Time in the left menu, and selecting Restrict content and privacy, you can set restrictions. If you set a password for restrictions, your password will later be used to change or disable the restriction - it can take away access to Safari, the App Store, and several other apps that can't be removed. When you purchase an app, you can download it and reinstall it when you return to the App Store. An app with a cloud next to it with an arrow pointing down is one that you've previously downloaded but don't currently have on your iPad. You can download these apps again. When you open the App Store, tap the Profile button in the upper-right corner, and then check all the apps you've purchased. If you press the button at the top of the read that's not on this iPad, the list will be deleted, narrowed down to apps purchased from other devices, and won't be installed on your device. You can access the app as long as it's available in the app store. Thank you for letting us know! Tell us why! For what!
