The idea behind this is that longer comments are more likely to have useful information, so ReSavr acts as a file for these deleted comments. Although it is mainly for comments, it also saves all posts that had a comment removed. The interface is easy to use, and you can see precisely how many deleted comments each post has. You don't have to read all comments because ReSavr provides short previews when you hover over each title. You can only scroll through the comments before opening those containing the information you need.2. CeditCedit is one of the most widely used methods to find deleted posts and comments on Reddit. It is a third-party website with a cool-looking interface that allows you to quickly browse through the deleted comment database. All deleted comments are retrieved automatically, and then previewed in threads that are highlighted with red, so you can easily find what you need. You can browse deleted comments in the same way that you'll browse the Reddit comments. Find posts that have been highlighted in red and easily find out which comments were originally deleted. If you want to find deleted comments in specific Reddit posts, you can copy the URL and delete the letter R from reddit.com. Just replace it with the letter c to convert it to cedit.com. The page will load in the Cedit interface, and you'll see all deleted comments highlighted in red.3. Wayback MachineWayback saves all deleted websites by taking screenshots of each page. It works for all sites, not just for Reddit. You can use it to go back in time, so to talk, and view posts or comments from Reddit before they are deleted in the first place. First, copy the url of the post that contains the deleted comments you want to see. Go then paste the URL into the search bar and click Browse History. The Wayback machine will provide you with a calendar, so you can find version of the post before the comments are deleted.
