In the cursive lesson on this web page, you will practice the uppercase letters that you can change to connect to the following characters: With the exception of letters (P, V, W, X), you can write uppercase letters so that you don't have to hold up your pencil and write the next letter in words. Characters F, H, and K require a pencil lift, but these characters can be connected to the following characters: I think you can connect uppercase X, but I don't plan to create a worksheet for uppercase X for this set. Some characters do not change at all, and others require minor loops and dips. The image below is an example of changing an uppercase F, featuring an uppercase letter F that has been changed due to a high connection that has been changed due to a low connection. The bottom of the character is immersed in the back to connect to the next character in the word. In the example, F is connected by a and e. Each is slightly different to connect either high or low. The other low connection would be your and my stuons. The letter o is a high connection.
