

I'm not robot

Continue

Shelly de killer quotes

Edit Share Shelly de Killer Image Gallery Sprite Gallery This article contains information from the unofficial English translation patch for Gyakuten Kenji 2. Due to the lack of an official translation of the Japanese Gyakuten Kenji 2, the information and names in this article come from the unofficial English translation patch known as Ace Attorney Investigations: Miles Edgeworth: Attorney's Path. More information on this can be found here. If you have personal experience with the media element in question, you can help Ace Attorney Wiki by improving this article. Please refer to the style manual when adding information. Unknown (both eyes always appear closed) Black with狼死 central↻ white stripe ((Tarou Tanaka) (alias; equivalent of John Doe) Bernick de Killer (equivalent of Shelly de Killer) Alonso Bistro (alias; Equivalent of John Doe)蝶狼死 (Hālángs— Häilüowèimén) (equivalent of Shelly de Killer) (Tiánzhōng Tàiláng) (alias; equivalent of John Doe) Wataru Yokojima (Japanese) Marcus Stimac (in English) Shelly de Killer ~ The Whim of a Murderous Gentleman A special investigation team exists for several years, but few know it. [...] Their job is to find the owner of this card... A man named Shelly de Killer. And just like his name says, he's a murderer, a murderer. The best at this. Shelly de Killer is the third heir to a series of assassins known as de Killers who first became known in the early 20th century. De Killer does his job calmly and accurately, and always leaves behind his business card - a white card with a pink shell design - so that authorities know of his involvement, thus preventing his clients from becoming suspicious. Two of de Killer's targets are known: Jamm'nin Ninja actor Juan Corrida and the doubling of the body of Zheng Fa President Di-Jun Huang (although de Killer was led to believe he was the real Huang). De Killer was called to testify as a witness via a radio transceiver at Corrida's murder trial and was questioned in person (while in the guise of an ice cream seller) during the investigation into the murder of Ethan Rooke. Involvement in corrida's murder[edit | edit source] Main article: Goodbye, My Turn Her Unique Business Card. In March 2018, actor Matt Engarde hired de Killer to kill rival actor Juan Corrida during the Hero of Heroes Grand Prix event at gatewater imperial hotel on the 20th of the same month and retrieve a suicide note from Celeste Inpax, which was hidden inside a bear figurine. After the end of the Hero's Grand Prix Heroes, Engarde meets de Killer, who disguises himself as a delivery driver, and paid him as they contracted him. Shortly afterwards, de Killer went to Corrida's hotel room and killed the strangling him with his scarf. The killer then left his business card and gave Engarde the bear figurine as requested. Adrian Andrews, Engarde's manager, was the first to discover the crime scene. She accidentally took de Killer's business card and meddled at the crime scene to frame Engarde for the murder. The arrest was the first time one of de Killer's clients was arrested for one of his shots. His personal code meant he would do everything he could to free his client, and so he delivered the bear toy to Engarde Mansion and collected a video tape from the private room, which Engarde had told him to retrieve, but not watch. Disguised as a delivery man. Still under the guise of a delivery man, de Killer lured Maya Fey Away by alerting her to a phone call to reception. De Killer then gave Will Powers a transceiver to give defense attorney Phoenix Wright for two-way communication, and later demanded a complete acquittal for Engarde on a day of trial, holding Fey as a ransom. He kept Fey locked up in the basement of the Engarde Mansion and informed her of his profession and the agreement he had just made with Wright. Shortly before the trial, de Killer shot the case's prosecutor, Franziska von Karma, in the shoulder as a gift to Wright. When von Karma was sent to the Hottli Clinic, Miles Edgeworth pursued in his place. Although Wright tried to sue Adrian Andrews as the real killer, he failed to do so, and the trial was adjourned for the day. Before Andrews left, however, Edgeworth discovered the paper he had found absent-mindedly, and demanded that Andrews give it to him. After the trial, Wright went to see von Karma, and Edgeworth told him about de Killer. During Wright's investigation, Fey attempts to escape with de Killer's business card, and finds a photo of Celeste Inpax in a private room before de Killer captures her. When Engarde asked Wright to feed his cat Shoe at his villa, Wright met de Killer again, though under the guise of John Doe, Engarde's butler. Wright tried to get information from Doe, but the butler insisted that it would be inappropriate for him to talk about it. While Wright was in Corrida's hotel room, de Killer contacted Wright about the deal they had made. He reluctantly agreed to let Wright try again tomorrow, but communication between them suddenly broke down in static. The cause was eventually discovered: a spy camera hidden in one of Corrida's bear's gifts, which was traced back to Engarde. Wright confronted Engarde about this, and Engarde revealed her real person and that she had videotaped Corrida's murder as insurance against de as well as a possible way to blackmail him. Edgeworth was waiting for Wright as he left the detention center, and they went to the Crime Department to discuss Wright's situation. During the conversation, conversation, Killer contacted Wright again, and when Wright asked why de Killer would do so much for Engarde, the killer replied that he saw it as part of his duty to protect his clients. He then remarked that it would be quite annoying for someone to track down the signal and finished the call. Unfortunately for him, he had his position given away by a meow from Shoe at the end of the call. Edgeworth immediately sent police units to Engarde Mansion, but the killer had already fled. Wright later realized that he had previously spoken to de Killer face-to-face as butler John Doe. On the second day of Engarde's trial, Wright left in time collecting testimony from Powers and Andrews as Gumshoe and a police team tried to find de Killer. As the police locked themselves on de Killer, he managed to escape, but left the gun, the videotape, the bellboy's uniform and one of his business cards. He attempted to retrieve the tape, injuring three officers in the process, but failed to do so. Gumshoe took these items that de Killer had dropped and headed to the district courthouse. De Killer's radio transceiver. De Killer contacted Edgeworth outside court trying to testify, telling the prosecutor that his client was indeed Matt Engarde. The radio transceiver was brought to the support of witnesses, but de Killer betrayed Edgeworth and instead appointed Andrews as his client. However, Wright breaks down contradictory details in the killer's claims about his alleged client, which made de Killer understand what the lawyer was doing and cut communications. Just as the judge was about to deliver a not guilty verdict, von Karma appeared with the evidence Gumshoe had taken. Wright quickly contacted De Killer again and told him about the videotape. Realizing that de Killer was oblivious to the content or purpose of the tape, Wright informed him of what Engarde had done. Furious at this betrayal, de Killer broke his contract with Engarde and informed the court that if a client willingly betrayed him, he would swear bloody revenge on them. He then informed Wright that because the contract had been broken, he would return Fey to him. Once Engarde realized that doing otherwise would leave him at the mercy of the furious killer, the actor pleaded guilty to his crimes. After the trial, de Killer contacted Wright again via the transceiver. He said the attention the case was making it difficult for him to operate and that he planned to leave the country. He also told Wright to visit his website if he ever needed his services, before the transceiver self-destructed, without nothing to trace back to him. A curious client[edit | edit source] This article contains information from the unofficial English translation patch for Gyakuten Kenji 2. Due to the lack of an official translation of the Japanese Gyakuten Kenji 2, the information and in this article they come from the unofficial English translation patch known as Ace Attorney Investigations: Miles Edgeworth: Attorney's Path. More information on this can be found here. If you have personal experience with the media element in question, you can help Ace Attorney Wiki by improving this article. Please refer to the style manual when adding information. Presidential Assassination Attempts[edit | edit source] Main article: Turnabout Target De Killer strikes. A year later, Simon Keyes hired de Killer to assassinate President Di-Jun Huang of Zheng Fa. The assassin first attempted to infiltrate the president's bodyguards by masquerading as one. He managed to gather a good deal of information about the president's protection, including the names of the leader and under-leader of the guards, and soon struck. Although the head of the bodyguards, a man named Ethan Rooke, noticed de Killer, at which point the killer had managed to get closer to his target. The assassin easily overpowered most of the bodyguards, starting with sub-leader Horace Knightley, who grabbed him by the throat so hard that the latter was later forced to wear a brace around his neck and was unable to turn his head to the right. Unfortunately for de Killer, Ethan Rooke proved much more formidable, as he quickly grabbed, writhed, and shot the killer's left arm. De Killer manages to escape with his wounded arm and a newfound respect for Rooke's ability. The president's security was later changed so that only Rooke and Knightley would be on stage with the president during a speech in Gourd Lake in the United States, which was taking place two days after de Killer's attack. De Killer learned of the speech, as well as a planned assassination attempt staged that the president had planned in an attempt to increase his reporting ratings at home in Zheng Fa. The killer bandaged his wounded arm and hid a knife inside the dressing. He then acquired a red raincoat with a hood, as it would be the one the fake killer was wearing. Infiltrating the site posing as ice cream seller John Doe, de Killer waited for the opportunity to turn the murder into a real assassination. Moving through the panicked crowd with his red raincoat. As the president gave his speech, de Killer saw the other hooded figure pointing a laser show at the president's forehead. Gunshots soon rang out, and the crowd panicked. De Killer moved with the crowd, but made sure to remove his raincoat and hide it in a nearby barn so he was not suspected. Miles he was later called upon to investigate this apparent assassination attempt, and de Killer looked at him with interest. Edgeworth eventually learns of the red-hooded figure suspected of being the president's killer and then finds de Killer's raincoat. Since his wound would occasionally still be open and bleeding, a blood stain was found the discarded raincoat on the left side. Edgeworth used it to find De Killer in the crowd. De Killer tried to feign ignorance, but slipped by referring to Ethan Rooke by his full name, information he should not have known. Nonetheless, the killer testified about his sighting of another red-hooded figure, who turned out to be an aspiring journalist named Nicole Swift. Just then, Horace Knightley seemed to announce that the president was fine, but that Ethan Rooke had been killed. The bodyguard also told Edgeworth that Zheng Fa police would take control of the investigation. Just as Knightley did to take Swift away, de Killer grabbed the first and held the knife hidden in the bodyguard's throat. He revealed who he really was and demanded that Edgeworth be allowed to continue his investigation. Knightley had no choice but to submit to the killer, and so Edgeworth, Kay Faraday, Swift, Knightley, and de Killer boarded the nearby seaplane on which the president had arrived. Leaving the plane. Once aboard the plane, de Killer discovers that his target is hiding inside a secure room. He attempted to get Di-Jun Huang out by threatening to kill Knightley, but it soon became apparent that the president would not risk the life of his bodyguard. Satisfied with the progress of Edgeworth's investigation, de Killer proceeded to escape by turning off the lights and turning off everyone present. Shortly before Edgeworth sells out, de Killer informed the prosecutor that he had not killed Ethan Rooke, and left his business card. The killer then took a dinghy and fled across Lake Gourd, devoid of any police presence. Edgeworth eventually uncovered the entire fake assassination plot, as well as the fact that Knightley had been the one who killed Rooke. However, the business card de Killer left behind remains an unsolved mystery to Edgeworth, with the card that left him wondering who de Killer's client was. Punishment[edit | edit source] Main article: The Grand Turnabout In the following days, de Killer became suspicious of the president's apparent willingness to allow Knightley to be killed in his place, finding him inconsistent with his known character. De Killer eventually discovers that his client had lied to him about his goal: the man he had tried to kill was not the president at all, but a double body. Keyes knew this from the beginning, after witnessing the death of the real president, but he failed to communicate this information. This broke de Killer's rules for a killer-client relationship of trust, and so he decided once again to terminate his contract and give the to his client. On April 3, de Killer visited fellow murderer Sirhan Dogen's cell, knowing that Dogen knew Keyes, but Dogen had escaped from prison. De Killer saw Keyes' role in manipulation manipulation of Edgeworth's cases the following day and observed the prosecutor under the guise of a cotton candy seller atop the Grand Tower. After Edgeworth solves the case, de Killer contacted him through a transceiver and informed him of the existence of a master mind behind the case. Edgeworth had already realized that someone else was pulling the line in the case, but had given up his d.A.'s badge during his investigation, and de Killer wondered what Edgeworth would do without it. The doubling of the body was later discovered dead, causing Edgeworth to investigate the murder. While Edgeworth was investigating the roof of the tower, de Killer made himself known and provided information about his client, the mind Edgeworth was looking for, without giving away the customer's identity, as this would violate a non-disclosure guarantee he held with his other customers. The two killers. Edgeworth eventually discovers that Keyes is the master's mind and double-body killer, and confronts him at the Berry Big Circus. After Edgeworth reveals Keyes' role in recent events, de Killer suddenly appears, now free to attack his client without violating his guarantee of non-disclosure. Holding his former client to stab, de Killer told Keyes that he knew he had lied about the double's identity and had caused de Killer's assassination attempts to fail, and moved to kill him. However, before he could hurt, Dogen suddenly appeared. The match led to a draw, each with his weapon at the other's throat. Dogen asked de Killer to spare Keyes' life and instead let him serve a prison sentence. Realizing that Dogen was serious about this request, de Killer pulled back and made his escape, with Interpol agent Shi-Long Lang in close pursuit. De Killer managed to escape the Interpol agent and returned to Gourd Lake. As the arm wound reopened, he remarked that he would never forget the man he had given him. Reflecting on the desirability of continuing to sell ice cream or crepes, he observed that he wished to live the peaceful life of a seller until his services were in demand again. Personality[edit | edit source] Mugshots. Shelly de Killer is a polite and calm individual who never directly shows his emotions. He has a strictly professional view of his work and carries it out accurately, but he also greatly appreciates the bond of trust he has with his clients, so that he always meets with them face to face, and considers betrayal a horrible crime that deserves death. Every time he commits a contract for a client, de Killer leaves a business card with a shell drawing at the crime scene. The card confirms that you have committed and therefore acts as insurance against any charges that the customer may face. De Killer also has his own website for the murder investigation. Though de Killer pretended to a delivery man, a butler, a bodyguard, an ice cream seller and a cotton candy seller for his well-known jobs, these roles are little more than a change of clothes, as it does not change his appearance or personality. However, it seems to have the ability to merge into the crowd very easily, despite its distinct appearance. De Killer and fellow murderer Sirhan Dogen seem to have met each other at some point in the past. Name[edit | edit source] His Japanese surname Koroshiya literally means murderer. Also, because it is phonetically written, it contains shi (死), the character by death. Sazaemon, his Japanese real name, comes from sazae, which means shell (in reference to his business card). Like its surname, it consists of purely phonetic components and contains the characters for left (左) and right (右), the latter without pronunciation. Its name in Chinese has been translated蝶 as häilüowèimén in which 蝶 means shell (in reference to his business card). At nine kanji, its full Japanese name is unusually long than is typical in Japan. His Japanese pseudonym, Tarou Tanaka, is a generic and simple name in Japanese. The English equivalent would be approximately John Smith or John Doe. Shelly refers to her business card, a note with an image of a shell shell. De Killer is a reference to his occupation. Although involuntary, his full name Shelly de Killer is actually the shell killer. His alias John Doe is used when a subject's true identity is unknown or retained for legal reasons. It is also used for a male corpse or hospital patient if their identity is unknown. His name French Bernick may derive from bernique, which is French for limpet, which would continue the theme of the shell seen in its Japanese and English names. Alternatively, and always following the theme of the shell, it could also come from Bernard, since the term French for a hermit crab is bernard-fermite. His alias is French from allons au bistro, which means let's go to the pub. Development[edit | edit source] Although the police are aware that he is associated with him, the design of de Killer's distinctive shell is clearly visible on his ice cream seller attire. However, even Miles Edgeworth did not seem to recognize him during their face-to-face encounter, which is strange considering that he was able to instantly recognize the drawing on one of the killer's business cards in Farewell, My Turnabout. Some of the objects used by de Killer are used to indicate his emotions/personalities, especially since the killer himself always appears stoic, with the only exception in the anime: the radio used by de Killer to testify in Farewell, My Turnabout has a resemblance to the killer himself; the line down in the middle of the transceiver looks like killer killer's face and the dial resembles its monocle. This simlarity is supported by the fact that the furrow on the dial looks a lot like its constantly closed eyes and rotates according to its emotions; it emits steam when it is angry and sweats losing oil when it is nervous. In Gyakuten Kenji 2, Killer's ice cream cone is seen holding a resemblance to de Killer himself. In the case of ice cream, it has a cherry monole, and the ice cream itself is divided into two flavors in the center, reflecting the characteristic facial spots of de Killer. Ice cream, like the transceiver, shows de Killer's emotions; it emits steam when it's angry and sweats dripping melted ice cream when it's nervous. Community content is available under CC-BY-SA, unless otherwise stated. Noticed.

reguvududixozoluriset.pdf , homologous analogous and vestigial structures worksheet , mpsc psi syllabus in marathi.pdf , pex supply stops , applied kinesiology david walther.pdf , normal_5fc3bd265fb89.pdf , normal_5f9c06f6b8341.pdf , carl sauer s cultural landscape theory , normal_5fc4aff17b0a8.pdf , normal_5fcea5d460d.pdf , lantern oaths orange , molepezawwuz.pdf , normal_5fcte61e6902b.pdf ,