(Photo by Gerard C. Toltown/ Getty Images) The 2019 NASCAR season is officially underway, which means that motorsports fans no longer have one, not two, but three series to keep track for the next few months. To make sure you don't miss the Checkered Flag, use the NASCAR 2019 flag-printing schedule! This year's schedule runs from mid-February to November. Most weekend sactions feature at least two in the company's series, sometimes all three. Things officially close next weekend when the entire crew arrives for Daytona, followed by Valentine's Day (February 15), Xfinity Series (February 16) and then cup series (February 17). Only two weekends do not include a cup race: June 15-17 and August 24-26. Meanwhile, while the truck is in a whopping 16 weeks where they are away from duty, there is a big difference between March 29 and May, and it can get very confusing, as well as get over six weeks. Normally, different series compete on the same tracks every weekend, but this is not always the case. For example, the first weekend in June, there is truck racing in Texas while all other incidents are in Michigan. When the series arrives in August for Michigan, Xfinity is then in central Ohio. And of course, every division Its own different race days and start times. There are over 50 races in 2019, but you can find all of them in an easy reading document.
