[3] Athletic St. Stephen & St. Aganis School Competition in The Interstate Sports Conference (Boys) and Independent School League (Girls). The girls' leacross team is a once-in-a-time force, currently ranking in the top five in the country, the 2008 season ended undefeated. In 1997, the girls' lecross team was #1 the nation. [Reference required] The 2010 Girls' University L'Lecross won the ISL League title and the VAAA State Championship. Then in 2009, the Girls' Leacos team won their third consecutive Vex title as a No. [4] The girls' success is located behind the Leacos team, The Cati-Jensens, team coach. In 2008, Jennings had been coaching the team for 32 years and started the entire program with Aix associates. When The Jainkins, who also works as a fifth grade PE teacher and coaches seventh and eighth grade teams, works to teaching girls how to play at a very young age, [5] and as a player it holds, Coach Jennings primarily breeds LeCos players. [6] Since low school many university teams have been in St. Stephen's and St. Agenis, and are picked up by The Jainkins for success in this game. The Jainkins girls initially learns wood lerosé stick instead of a metal one, which claims it is easy to throw and catch with. To become a top team, the intensity and the pertinence are essential, but wishes that the girls on his team would feel less pressure. [5] The school's boat program also has a rich history, regularly changing state and THE I.C. champions; three wrestlers have won the Lehai National Preparation Tournament in history, twice of them. The 2010 University Softball team won the ISL tournament championship and also ended the season in the league for first place. The 2010 Boys University LeCross team won the VAAA State Championship. Girls' University Tennis won the ISL Championship in 2010. Girls' University Field Hockey also won the ISL and State Championships in 2010. Many St. Stephen's & St. Aganis School players go to play at the collet level every year. Sports include: Baseball, Basketball, Cross Country, Field Hockey, Football, Golf, Ice Hockey, Lacrosse, Football, Ball, Swimming, Tennis, Track and Field, Volleyball, and Wrestling. [7] Arts, School Theatre Program, known as a phase Has won several regional awards for his performance. The 2009 fall production of an al-Saif night dream was set for four Cappie Awards (Critics and Artist Programs) which were put into the top five of 54 productions each, including the light, making, and supporting actors. In 2015 Sassas was nominated for five Cappies for richard III production. Two elders got a Cappies award in the creative category for musical structure and performance. [8] In addition, Sissas got two Cappies nominations for the production of the decline of 39 steps in the sound and special effects/technology category. [9] And there are strong contributions to the mandali programmes. In 2010, students won seats in regional music groups that have participated in all district courses and all district band, as well as solo and paired events. In 2010, the Upar School Strading Arts achieved a level five ranking as a level five at the X-Festival. Also in 2010, the air pair received the best rating sedate for the fifth straight year as a level four air pair. In addition, more than 25 students have been non-traditional in SHM, the High School Society honoring music. The live-on stage with special lighting and painting systems is a green room equipped with actions and audio of male and female dressing rooms. CPAC also includes music classrooms, recording studios, and a music library. Sustainability students st Stephen and St. Aganes School have a drive for sustainability for sustainability students. The school will host students for its ninth annual students in spring 2017. The third sustainability meeting was locally recognized, where a few participants were interviewed by Fox 5 journalists. [11] Sustainability students come together to discuss plans to get students from a conference that has about 100 Students from the Washington DC Metro area to learn about the problems and achieve better sustainability in schools. [12] Over the past decade, Sissas has worked to make its buildings efficient, improve transportation systems, and reduce solid waste by recycling, better procurement, and paper-related communications. To increase awareness about energy consumption and encourage responsible energy use in classrooms and offices, the school maintains a real-time energy dashboard that report the school's development of energy consumption. The school also merges in its curriculum in sustainability. Information about students Many take part in the activities on the waterways through hands and in the distances along the Potomac River. Students have also participated in the tree plantation activities in which the umbrella of the jatri tree grows. As part of the wider access, Sassas has provided 250 students with each other around the area for a day of environmental education and kumaradry in which sustainability hostannual students for the conference. National and local speakers and experts share their passion and expertise with students and engage in activities on hands completely in a day to encourage their advocacy for environmental awareness and action. The school believes that the world is important to prepare its students for that, what problems they have on them and the human role that it has played. The school wants to try to see this by a sustainability committee, a group of students, a group of students, a community of staff, and all three campus administrators who get together to achieve the school's objectives. [13] St. Stephen and St. Aganis also have sustainability measures on each campus. At lower school, there is kind garden, which has a project in which the Kindergarteners plant and maintains its garden. Another fifth grade is the Sustainability Committee, a group of fifth grade students who oversee all small student-led projects. Middle school has an environment squad where students can choose green about how awareness promotes and can affect the environment positively. This group encourages students and teachers to engage in sustainable operations and set an example through their garden. Also in middle school is a greenhouse where science class increases to study the seedlings and botany and gardening for the Sissas campus. Vegetables, flowers, and herbs are used in our campus gardens which add food to area food banks. The upper school has a perkins' courtyard. The Perkins courtyard is home to cultivating vegetables and local plants maintained by upper school students. Vegetables are all three serving in the campus dining hall. [14] The 2016 Allen Pailing Environmental Exelation Award has been presented at St. Stephen's & St. Aganis School. The award was presented during the Ramadan Day celebration on April 30, one of which has been sponsored by the event, which was selected as a 2016 U.S. department of the A.M. Environmental Policy Commission and A.M. Environmental Policy Commission and A.M. St. Stephen&St. Aganes Middle School Education Green Ribbon School. It is a national environmental sustainability award presented to schools, districts and post-secondary institutions. Education Secretary John King announced the Earth Day, Honoris, April 22, 2016. This year only six private schools were selected and Sassas is only one from virginia district of Columbia. Maryland. Sassas was formally presented with the award on July 20, 2016 in Washington, DC.
