Last man standing football pool template

Jimmie Johnson will also compete for the role of SurvivorOtto Greule Jr/Getty ImagesScientist pool is the antithesis of fantasy football, fun versus disappointment. Raiders of the Lost Ark vs Kingdom of the Crystal Skull - they are complete opposites if you haven't caught my drift. Only the strong survive. The rules are simple: choose one command a week, right up, without spreading. If they win, you keep going; one loss, you're done. It seems so easy, doesn't it? Wrong! So many things can happen during a game that can have you sitting nice or smashing bottles. Not long ago, Mr. Tom Brady went down in the first quarter against the Chiefs in the first week. Half of my 500-man pool picked up the Patriots.I showed sympathy for Brady--s injury looked very painful and I'm a fan, but I was thrilled that half of my pool could come out in week one. Of course, Matt Cassel pulled Tom Brady's move himself and won the game, proving that a lot could happen. Participating in a fantasy football draft guarantees you at least 13 weeks of gut statistical analysis. Paying for your funds in the survival pool guarantees you one choice. The first week in your head-to-head league or rotisserie is a tune; Key pickup waiver wire can dramatically change your season. The first week in the survival pool can be your last; To thrive, you need to use every bit of knowledge, wit, and strategy you have. You can take my advice as I went 17-for-17 in the previous pool and was crowned Champ.The following quizzes can prove extremely useful in your quest to be the last person standing:WAIT! Patience is a virtue. Don't jump to a conclusion and pick your team for the second Monday night football signings and Chris Berman invents five new nicknames. Let the week play out. Wait until at least Friday to make your choice. A lot of things can happen in a given week. Starters could go downstairs, coaches could break free, Antonio Cromartie could have another kid. So wait, read, and research before you choose. Enjoy College Football Day on Saturday and present your choice before you head overnight. DON'T WAIT! My high school baseball coach has given our team some quality tips that come crunch time in our season: Never go down with a bullet to the gun. He was talking about our pitcher ace, but I'm talking about a particular team. Don't expect to use the Saints when you think you can retire from the Panthers during the week. Such risks can prove costly. RANK YOUR TEAMSMake the list and check it twice. Create a multilevel list of teams that made the playoffs last year, teams that almost made the playoffs, the teams with the greatest potential, and the teams you never want Create a system. If the previous two playoff teams play each other, don't go near that game. Choose a team to go after just a year like in 2008 The Lions went winless. (They actually went 4-0 that pre-season, thus proving my rule of never judging anything by preseason.) For example, these are the teams that made the playoffs in 2009:AFC - Jets, Colts, Bengals, Chargers, Ravens, PatriotsNFC - Eagles, Saints, Packers, Vikings, Cowboys, CardinalsUnless it's Week 13 or later and you have no other choice, don't pick a game in which these teams play each other. On the other hand, if these teams don't play each other, I would seriously consider their choice. Get on with a little help from your friendsThe Beatles knew something. Help is everywhere; you just need to know where to find it. Read during the week, watch TV shows, listen to radio and podcasts. There are people who know more than you and you should appreciate their opinions. Select a couple of games you like during the week, followed by research. One warning. Not for all this I do. Don't explore to the point where you can't make up your mind. If you get to this point, you're in trouble. THINK LUCKY, feel it, know it. The carnation sounds, but it works. Karma is a funny thing. The Year of the Patriots went undefeated, I waited to use them until late in the season against the Ravens.They lost. The game was seemingly over when Tom Brady was stopped on fourth down. Then all of a sudden, the ref claimed the timeout was caused to snap by the Crows. Brady got another shot, turned fourth down, and won the game. You know why? I felt it. The force was with me. The best time of the year is almost thy us. Baseball is approaching the playoffs, and nfl and college football is about to start. Follow me week after week and I will help guide your way through your pool and collect a good fat check in December. I'll give you the teams I like and teams to stay away from every week. Appreciate my opinion because I hold the coveted title you're all looking for: The Survivor.Below is my election for week one: Games I likeBies over the Lions - As bad as Cutler was, the Bears are at home, and Matt Forte has proven critics wrong. Bears win 21-10 Titans over Raiders – Well, why not go against the Raiders? The game is at Tennessee, Chris Johnson is the best RB in the NFL, and Jason Campbell hasn't proven anything yet with the Raiders' new look. McFadden's question mark, and the only thing I like about them is tight end Zac Miller. Titans win 27-7Falcons over Steelers - Matt Ryan and company enter Steel City with high hopes again against the Roethlisberger-less Steelers. I wouldn't trust Byron Leftwich to beat any team in the NFL, to be frank. Ryan, Michael Turner, Roddy White and Tony Gonzalez lead the offensive wheel over the Steelers. Falcons win 31-14 Chargers over Chiefs - My safe pick of the week. Philip Rivers is back, rookie sensation Ryan Matthews fits right into powerful offense, Malcolm think he's Vincent Jackson and Antonio Gates doing everything he has to do and more. What else can I say. I don't think Cassel and Jamaal Charles/Thomas Jones are enough, other than to maybe make a first-half scare. The Chargers win 38-21Games to stay away fromVikings @ Saints - Rematch of the NFC Championship Game. Pure entertainment, not betting games. Bengals @ Patriots - First test for wr duo VH1. The game is pending and watching. Browns @ Bucs – Battle of the terrible team. Colts @Texans - Shootout: Manning vs. Shaub. It's fun to watch, but don't touch. Packers @ Eagles - Kolb's first appearance will determine how often we go up against the Eagles in the future. He could prove us wrong. Cardinals @ Rams - Leinart can't fit into Kurt Warner's shoes, and Fitz's numbers will suffer. Bradford can surprise us all. Cowboys @Redskins - I'd stay away from any NFC East matchup. The best division in the NFL. Ravens @ Jets - Tough punches against Ray Lewis. Hmm, tough. Let this go. Carpentersville, IL 60110 Please include player name and email address. RULES OF THE GAME: Choose the winner of one game weekly (without spreading). If this team wins you move on, if this team loses you are out. You have to pick another team every week. You cannot select the same command multiple times during a round. If the selected team loses, you don't play completely for the round. (If you don't use the first week buy back option.) First week Buy back option. If your team loses in the first week of round play, you can re-enter the pool with another $20 entry fee, but, you can't re-select your team pick from the first week for the rest of the round. The Buy Back option only applies to the first week of play for the round, not for the following weeks. When the pool is down to a few players remaining, the rest of the players can choose to split the bank evenly rather than play next week. All remaining players must unanimously agree to split the pot or the round continues. If the NFL game ends in a tiebreaker, players who have selected either of the two teams will be awarded the win and will play next week. If the round is still active going into the playoffs, all playoff teams are eligible regardless of whether the team was previously selected as a player during the regular season. The same rules apply to the playoffs as in the regular season. The player can only select a command once. The playoffs end with the Super Bowl as the final game. If all other active players are eliminated in the same week then these players could choose to split the bank or continue playing next week as if their selected teams won. All remaining players must unanimously agree to split the pot. If not, the game continues. All selections must be up to 12:00p EST every Sunday; if you don't pick a team that plays Thursday or Saturday. For Thursday and Saturday games, enter your pick 1 hour before kickoff. If your choice is not sent before 12:00 EST Sunday or you enter team because you previously selected this team in the round; then by default you will be given an away team at the end of Monday night's game of the week. If you have previously selected the default command, then you are eliminated from the round. Round.
