Learn more about our Morkie puppies for sale below! Breed History A Morkie is a crossbreed of Yorkshire terriers and breeds of Maltese dogs. Yorkshire and Maltese create a mixture of intelligence and elegance. The earliest Morkies were bred in the 1990s by the Americans to create a low-throwing and sociable companion. Demand for this fashionable dog has increased since then. Their soft coats are in black, brown, apricot or white. Temperament They may look like teddy bears, but don't be fooled. Morkies are small but selfish dogs. They are unaware of their size and will try to dominate other smaller animals and pets. Morkies are also attention seekers. With early socialization, they will learn to tolerate other dogs and cats but still prefer to become an only dog or pet in the family. They love physical activity and games that involve close contact. They cannot stand being alone and can become very destructive and will bark excessively. They form strong bonds with their owners. They also bind closely to one person in dormitory households and prefer small families rather than quite larger ones. Their stubbornness weakens with early training, so be sure to start getting to know them with commands on time. Environment As long as they are indoors with their owners, the Morkies stay happy. They fit into apartments and families who spend a lot of time at home with their children. They quickly adapt to changes in their surroundings and love to be hugged. They are excellent dogs on their knees when they are trained as puppies. They have a high prey that can be attributed to their Yorkshire blood. It is recommended to keep them on a leash outside, so as not to hurt chasing prey. They are not recommended if you are looking for a dog to run or swim. Exercises Because of their high energy drive, they need at least thirty-five minutes of exercise per day. Spice things up with a short walk, lively game sessions and games. Their size corresponds to their requirement for exercise, so too vigorous exercises can hurt them. Like all require patience from their owners during As soon as they are fourteen weeks old, start socializing them with new environments and other pets. This facilitates the training process. Keep them away from large pets that could hurt them. Focus on basic pot pot pot commands and training before introducing tricks. They appreciate the rewards of being obedient. Exciting mental activities help the Morkies to bond with their owners. Because they crave attention so much, it's a great way to keep them well indoors. Do not use the collar when walking with them to prevent suffocation or collapse of the trachea. Use a harness instead. Seduction Morkies barely quit. To prevent binding and matting, their hair requires daily brushing. Their coat color will change with their development. It is important to start priming them early, so get used to owning. Due to their fine and delicate nature, they require gentle seduction. Every two weeks nail finishes, hairstyles and daily dental care are essential. Small breeds of dogs are more susceptible to oral infections. Use a finger brush and the recommended toothpaste for the dog. Regularly bathe in Morkie so that their coats are free of dirt. Check and clean the ears as directed by the veterinarian. Their eyes should also be cleaned regularly to prevent infections. General seduction should take place at least once a month. Morkie seduction requires patience and meticulousness, because they are such fragile creatures. Call the dog groomer if you can not deal with them carefully.
